Cities of Megasecurity: Tracing Global-City Studies, and Mapping New Urban Governance and Uprising

Paul Amar

University of California, Santa Barbara
Agenda

• Trace the intellectual history of “global city” studies, as interventions in contentious politics of urban life.

• Identify certain powerful actors, security formations, and economic interests that merit more attention as “global city studies” moves forward.

• Revisit the “Cairo School of Global Urban Studies” and present the cases of urban securitization and social uprising in Cairo and Rio de Janeiro.
19402-60s: Modernist Urbanism

- ISI (Import Substitution Industrialization)
- Nationalization of steel, concrete, fossil fuels
- The secular religion of engineering
- Scale jumping
- Military corps of engineers
- State as “view from jet plane, or bombardier”
- Social engineering rather than popular participation
- Slum clearance and “urban blight”
- Megastate, megascale
- Functional segregation, and suburbanization and racial segregation
- Backlash and revolt

1980s-1990s: Global City as Financial Hub

- Post Cold War
- Megascale of state as social engineer is discredited
- State continues to expand, but in policing, prison, security realms, shifts to “parastate” and “privatized” modes for housing, education

Urban “model” becomes one of financial hub for private sector, “disloyal” to the nation, promoting “globalization”

“Culture” designated as enclave where “the local” is authentically preserved as a form of social capital and competitive advantage
Mid-1990s: The Creative City

- The city as dynamic, productive “civil society” and creative hub
- City reemerges as ideal place to live (not suburbs of the past, or the enclaves of today)
- Multiculturalism, sexuality, -pro-immigrant, “cultural resistance to global homogeneity”
- The liberal archipelago
- Gentrification
- From “FIRE” cities to design, tech and “branding” hubs
- Problem: boutique cities?
- Focus on Global North
- Strong critique by “neoliberal city” school in UK and by “Cairo School”
Mid-90s, 2000s: “Planet of Slums”

- Recognition that “Global City” and “Creative City” models ignored the primary realities of urbanism for most city dwellers: “informal settlements”
- Vernacular urban phobia, drug wars, “Arab Street,” slums as a racial space and as the new “dark continent” of criminogenesis
- Hernando de Soto and the “revolutionary” revaluation of the capitalist agency of slum residence
- Realities: Microcredit, charging for water and privatizing security, and “debt democratization”
- Reassessing the state and elite formations that create the “planet of slums” WHILE empowering real participation by residents
- The rise of the Pacification Police and the Humanitarian Military in and around slum areas – the new internal colony
2010-2013: Explosion Urban-Transnational Uprisings and Utopias

- Tahrir and Tunis
- Indignados and Occupy Wall Street
- Istanbul and Rio de Janeiro
- Shift to public spaces as stagings, platforms, utopias
- Facebook generation, theaters of clashes between police state and radical youth practice

Return of anarchy theory

Neglect of urban-global history:
- Is this a revolution of the “creative classes”/elite “new media”youth,
- uprising of the “planet of slums,”
- reemergence of a city of manufacturing and labor struggles
- reemergence of high-modernism lead by military and big contractors
2010s-today: “New Materialism”

- Infrastructure
- Objects as actors
- Concrete, minerals, roads, walls, carbon molecules
- Megascale urbanisms return
- Sometimes as socialist state (Pink Wave), sometimes as crony capitalist-military alliance (Russia, Egypt, US)
- Mass politics of spectacle (sports stadiums, Olympics, landmark buildings and bridges)
- Mass populisms and state violence
- Mass reactions from youth, children, displaced communities, demanding “right to the city”
- My critique of “new materialism” and its focus on objects and tech-science
- The human as object of security, rescue, protection, paternalism
- The scale of object politics and the massification of “the people” through human-security: CITIES OF MEGASECURITY
CASE STUDY: Shifting Geographies of Urbanism in Cairo

• Egypt since 1973:
  – Making the Market State (liberalization) or
  – Making the Thug-Crony State (securitization)?

• Informalization of housing and governance:

• Innovations in popular sovereignty
The baltagiya as parastatal center of governmentality, but projected as the outside.... the shadow state.
2008-2012 Revolutionary Downtown, Workers Republics, and Bandit Utopias

- Transformations of downtown, as peri-urban developments are enclaved
- Radical sociability of downtown, versus new contentious middle-class developments
‘Mu’allima Feminism’
Children's Social Movements
• Workers Republics (women factory spaces) in Delta

• New Persian Gulf sexuality and sex commerce formations in Egypt

• Bandit Utopias (and dystopias) in Upper Egypt and Suez, etc.

• Mohammad Mahmoud as Paris Commune
2013-2014 Sissi Period: Saudi Surge?

- Spaces of violence and scale of violence focus on contests between Brotherhood-Qatar bloc and Saudi-Egyptian Army bloc

- Certain new spaces, new moral panics
Rio: Pacification of Slums and Shock-Ordering of “Asphalt”

Review

• Scale Politics of Mega-urbanism, finance, security

• Limitations of “creativity” promotion, financial democratization and slum entrepreneurship

• New materialities, infrascructures and security globalizations

• The emergence of mass resistance – toward progressive global-city revolution? Or violent populisms that will preserve the cronies and contractor elites?
