

Poverty, Inequality, and the “New Left” in Latin America

Tuesday, July 21, 2009

Speakers' Bios

Santiago Levy is Vice President for Sector and Knowledge of the Inter-American Development Bank. He previously served as General Manager and Chief Economist for the IDB Research Department, General Director at the Mexican Social Security Institute (IMSS), and Deputy Minister at the Ministry of Finance and Public Credit of Mexico. Dr. Levy has also taught at the Instituto Tecnológico Autónomo de México (ITAM) and at Boston University. He has written extensively on topics such as poverty reduction, competitiveness, and microeconomics. Dr. Levy holds a Ph.D. in economics from Boston University.

Nora Lustig is Samuel Z. Stone Professor of Latin American Economics at Tulane University and a non-resident fellow at the Center for Global Development. She has taught at George Washington University, the Universidad de Las Américas-Puebla, and El Colegio de México. Dr. Lustig has also held leading positions with the United Nations Development Program, the Inter-American Development Bank, and The Brookings Institution. An expert on development economics and poverty and income distribution with a Latin American focus, she has written on microeconomics, poverty, and social rights in the developing world. Lustig received her doctorate in economics from the University of California, Berkeley.

Carolina Sánchez-Páramo, a Spanish national, works in the Poverty Reduction Group (PREM anchor) at the World Bank. A labor economist by training, she has done extensive work on poverty and distribution, education, labor markets and social protection issues, both from an analytical and operational angle. She has worked in Eastern Europe, Latin America and, most recently, South Asia. Prior to joining the World Bank, Sánchez Paramo obtained a Ph.D. in economics from Harvard University.