WOODROW WILSON CENTER

Mission Statement

The Woodrow Wilson Center is the living, national memorial to President Wilson, established by Congress in 1968 and headquartered in Washington, D.C. The Center is a nonpartisan institution, supported by public and private funds, engaged in the study of national and world affairs. The Center establishes and maintains a neutral forum for free, open, and informed dialogue. The Center's mission is to commemorate the ideals and concerns of Woodrow Wilson by providing a link between the world of ideas and the world of policy and by fostering research, study, discussion, and collaboration among a broad spectrum of individuals concerned with policy and scholarship in national and international affairs. In addition to the more than 700 meetings and lectures it holds each year, the Wilson Center maintains an active campaign of outreach through books, newsletters, the award-winning Wilson Quarterly magazine, and the globally syndicated dialogue radio and television programs.

CANADA INSTITUTE

Mission Statement

The Canada Institute of the Woodrow Wilson Center works to increase awareness and knowledge about Canada and Canada-U.S. issues among U.S. policymakers and opinion leaders.

CANADA INSTITUTE REPORT ON ACTIVITIES

OCTOBER 1, 2008 – MARCH 30, 2010

Canada's profile among Americans remains more limited than it should in spite of the enormous trading and cultural relationship between the two countries.

The Canada Institute was founded in 2001 in an effort to highlight the importance of the Canada-U.S. relationship among U.S. policymakers and the informed public.

The Canada Institute, an integral program of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars, promotes a free flow of ideas and policy options for deepening understanding, communication, and cooperation between the United States and Canada by engaging policymakers and members of the scholarly, business, and not-for-profit communities in creative dialogue.

The Canada Institute does not have a policy or legislative agenda. Rather, reflecting the Wilson Center's tradition of providing a non-partisan forum to foster and advance dialogue on important issues of the day, the Canada Institute's programs and publications—both in the United States and in Canada—seek to increase awareness and knowledge about Canada and Canada-U.S. issues among U.S. policymakers and opinion leaders.

The Institute's programs, publications, and partnerships in Canada and the United States consistently encourage open dialogue, bringing to the fore positive as well as critical views of the issue at hand. Outside of Washington, D.C., the Canada Institute strives to encourage a full discussion of bilateral policy by organizing programs in Canada that include U.S. perspectives on key bilateral issues.

Note from the

Canada Institute Director

At the forefront of the Canada Institute's mission is to promote dialogue on bilateral issues between Canada and the United States. Since the Institute's founding in 2001, we have worked tirelessly to build and improve our programming.

It is for this reason that the Canada Institute held a strategic planning retreat in September 2008 to consider the focus of its programming and outreach, and how to organize the Advisory Board in a manner that fully utilizes its members' expertise and experience.

One outcome of this meeting was the decision to focus the Canada Institute's programming in three core areas: energy and the environment, border and security, and trade issues. This initiative has enabled the Institute to fully commit its time and resources to issues of the highest priority in the bilateral relationship.

Participants in the retreat also reached a consensus that the Canada Institute should make a concerted effort to attract U.S. policymakers and their staff to its programming. To this end, the Institute's staff works to ensure that Congressional staffers and policy leaders with an interest in our programming participate in our events.

Beyond this, the Canada Institute has taken full advantage of the Center's recently created Wilson Center on the Hill program, which holds Wilson Center programs on Capitol Hill in an effort to directly engage U.S. policymakers on issues of national importance. Through this initiative, the Canada Institute has held programs on Buy American and the strengths of the Canadian banking system.

As always, we recognize that our work would not be possible without the continued guidance of our Advisory Board and support of our donors. We are also grateful to the corporations and individuals who participated in the March 2, 2009 Woodrow Wilson Awards dinner in Toronto. Their generosity has been a fundamental part of the Canada Institute's extraordinary success and growth.

I would also like to acknowledge the late C. Warren Goldring and the Canada Institute on North American Issues for their support of the Canada Institute's activities. Warren died in April 2009 and is missed by many; his initial gift helped the Canada Institute get its start.

Building a Smarter Grid: Challenges and Opportunities for the United States and Canada

March 18, 2010

The current electric transmission system in the United States will be challenged within the next 20 years to meet growing energy demand, said James Hoecker of Husch Blackwell Sanders at a conference hosted by the Canada Institute and Global Energy Initiative. The program provided a timely forum to discuss U.S. and Canadian efforts to transition to a more modern and efficient electric grid. Jean-Thomas Bernard of Laval University noted that new hydroelectric projects in Quebec are being constructed in remote areas that will produce and distribute electricity at a higher cost than existing hydro facilities in the province. Consequently, the era of producing low-cost hydroelectric power in Quebec will soon come to an end.

Barry Worthington of the United States Energy Association maintained that the United States will fail to realize the potential benefits of a Smart Grid unless “smart regulations” are put in place to oversee its development. Technology on its own will not be enough to successfully modernize the U.S. grid. Worthington further stated that industry must do a better job of communicating to consumers the potential benefits of a Smart Grid to prevent a public backlash over the costs of its implementation.

David Leeds of GTM research cautioned that much more investment, particularly from the private sector, will be needed in order to transition to a Smart Grid.

Kimberly Harriman, assistant secretary for energy for the State of New York, offered an overview of how New York is currently developing a clean energy grid. She highlighted the establishment of the New York State Smart Grid Consortium as central to New York’s efforts to modernize its grid. The Consortium is a public-private partnership that is committed to sharing best practices and institutional knowledge toward the common goal of implementing a Smart Grid and accelerating technical and institutional interoperability.

The event featured a keynote address from Patricia Hoffman, assistant secretary, Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability, U.S. Department of Energy, who emphasized the importance of developing a secure and resilient energy grid that is more predictive than reactive to new challenges and potential threats.

Trade Issues

Buy American: Creating or Costing U.S. Jobs?

November 17, 2009

"Buy American" has hurt the U.S. economy and cost the country jobs, said Dawn Champney of the Water and Wastewater Equipment Manufacturers Association at an event hosted by the Canada Institute. The program explored the effectiveness of the controversial Buy American provision included in the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act. Panelists conveyed concern that Buy American has greatly disrupted the U.S. private sector's ability to begin important infrastructure and other projects. According to Champney, $3.43 billion worth of stimulus projects in the water sector alone were delayed as a result of the Buy American section.

The stimulus package was designed so that states are the key drivers of spending the funds and implementing the bill's provisions. According to Christopher Whatley of the Council of State Governments, such a design has created major problems because states do not have the necessary staff or institutions needed to implement U.S. trade policy on their own. He suggested that Canadian provinces, which have a much greater capacity to handle procurement issues, should offer to advise state governments on how best to manage Buy American.

Not everyone was opposed to Buy American. Robert Baugh of the AFL-CIO maintained that Buy American is in fact creating jobs, particularly green jobs, and is an essential component to the U.S. economic recovery. In addition, said Baugh, the current economic crisis presented the United States with a rare opportunity to revitalize the country's manufacturing sector, which has lost 5.5 million jobs since the year 2000.

Jeffrey Schott of the Peterson Institute for International Economics noted that while Buy American is legal under WTO procurement procedures, the provision is still a form of protectionism. Schott said that Buy American greatly complicated and delayed the procurement process to the extent that the United States missed a real opportunity to help Americans through difficult economic times when they needed it the most. He stressed that the United States runs a great risk of retaliation from other major trading partners over Buy American, and noted that similar clauses are already appearing in other proposed U.S. legislation, which could have serious ramifications for the well-being of an already fragile U.S. economy.

Border Challenges and Regional Solutions: 2010 Olympics and the Pacific Northwest Experience

February 24, 2009

The 2010 Winter Olympic Games served as a catalytic moment to enhance bilateral connections between British Columbia and the State of Washington, said Sukumar Periwai of the Government of British Columbia at an event hosted by the Canada Institute in collaboration with the Pacific NorthWest Economic Region (PNWER), the Canadian American Business Council, and Western Washington University's Border Policy Research Institute. The conference explored how Northern border states and Canadian provinces are developing regional solutions to meet federal border mandates in a manner that balances efficiency, economic, and security objectives.

Implementing successful northern border policies requires policymakers to recognize the importance of empowering regions to develop border policies that meet their specific needs, as well as creating a shared long-term vision of what type of northern border Canada and the United States are striving to create, said Christopher Sands of the Hudson Institute. Such an approach helps to explain the success of the Canada-U.S. Smart Border Declaration, which was drafted and implemented shortly after 9/11, noted Sands.

However, as Edward Alden of the Council on Foreign Relations pointed out, the United States still views border control as the primary means of managing a diverse array of threats. As long as this is the case, Canada should expect more tightening and stricter controls at the border. Kathryn Bryk Freidman of the University at Buffalo Regional Institute added that improving border performance will require Canadian and U.S. officials to move beyond conventional "security versus economy" thinking when developing border policies. She recommended that officials should view the border as a "membrane," an entity that at times is flexible, fluid, and can be moved through easily, but can also harden and prevent passage when necessary.

The panel stressed the need for more effective use of pre-screening and pre-clearance programs such as Nexus and Enhanced Drivers Licenses. Kelly Johnston of the Campbell Soup Company suggested alleviating border congestion and costs by allowing activities frequently conducted at border crossings—such as confirming paperwork and sealing trucks—to be completed away from the border.

General Programs

Does North America Exist?: Governing the Continent after NAFTA and 9/11

MARCH 30, 2009

The implementation of NAFTA has not produced the type of trilateral integration many anticipated, particularly in political and institutional spheres, argued Stephen Clarkson of the University of Toronto at an event hosted by the Canada Institute, in partnership with the Hudson Institute and the Wilson Center's Mexico Institute. The discussion centered on whether North America exists in a meaningful way economically, politically, and culturally by looking at the institutions created by NAFTA, a broad selection of economic sectors, and the security policies put in place by the three neighboring countries following 9/11.

Clarkson maintained that NAFTA members may benefit from increased continental governing capability in the areas of antiterrorism, the labor market, narcotics, and the environment.

However, Sidney Weintraub of the Center for Strategic and International Studies questioned whether North American governance really mattered or was even necessary. While continental governance is currently lacking in North America, he explained, NAFTA members have managed their political and economic issues reasonably well in the absence of formal institutions.

Robert Pastor of American University disagreed with the view that North American integration is increasing, noting the rate of continental trade and travel has drastically decreased since 2001. He cited several reasons for the slowdown, such as increased security at the borders, immigration and drug trafficking issues, and China's emergence in the North American market.

Pastor also maintained that efforts to advance NAFTA have been stalled in part because the U.S. media perpetuates the myth that NAFTA is responsible for job losses in the United States and should distance itself from its neighbors as a result.

Media

The Canada Institute's work to foster discussion on the impact of Buy American provisions on the Canada-U.S. trade relationship drew considerable media coverage. Its program, "Buy American: Creating or Costing U.S. Jobs," held in November 2009, was covered by several major Canadian newspapers, including the National Post, Montreal Gazette, and Edmonton Journal.

The Canada Institute's eleventh One Issue, Two Voices publication, "Copyright Law in Canada and the United States," also attracted Canadian and U.S. media, including the Globe and Mail.

The Canada Institute occasionally holds media briefings in an effort to directly reach the Canadian and U.S. media on key bilateral issues. In February 2009, the Canada Institute's media briefing on President Obama's first visit to Canada was attended by several major news outlets, including the New York Times, the Washington Post, the Globe and Mail, and CBC television.

Noteworthy Media Stories Mentioning the Canada Institute
