OVERVIEW

The Kennan Institute was founded as a division of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars in December 1974 through the joint initiative of Ambassador George F. Kennan, then Wilson Center Director James Billington, and historian S. Frederick Starr. Named in honor of Ambassador Kennan's relative, George Kennan "the Elder" (1845–1924), a nineteenth-century explorer of Russia and Siberia, the Kennan Institute is committed to improving American expertise and knowledge about Russia, Ukraine, and other states in the region. It is one of several area studies programs of the Wilson Center. The Center is an international, interdisciplinary scholarly institution that fosters scholarship in the humanities and social sciences and encourages dialogue between the disciplines and the professions. The director of the Kennan Institute reports to the director of the Woodrow Wilson Center and receives guidance from the Kennan Institute Advisory Council and the Kennan Council.

The Kennan Institute offers residential research scholarships in the humanities and social sciences to academic scholars and specialists from government, the media, and the private sector. Thanks to its location in Washington, D.C., the Kennan Institute is able to provide its scholars with access to libraries, archives, research facilities, and human resources that are among the finest in the United States. Following in the tradition of the Wilson Center, the Institute also provides decision makers in the private and public sector access to the expertise of its scholars in residence through such activities as Policy Forums at the Department of State, its public lecture program, and interviews with the media.

In addition to its residential scholar program, the Institute administers an active program of public lectures featuring scholars and public figures from the United States, Russia, and other successor states to the Soviet Union. The Institute makes the results of its activities known in a variety of publications including Meeting Reports, Occasional Papers, Special Reports, and commercially published books. The majority of Kennan Institute publications are available free of charge and are regularly distributed to individuals, university libraries, and companies throughout the world, and are available through the Internet.

Through its innovative workshop series, the Kennan Institute serves as a forum where junior scholars can develop and discuss their research pertaining to a variety of topics concerning the region. The workshops bring together scholars with recent field experience from a variety of disciplines.

The Kennan Institute and the ISE Center (Information. Scholarship. Education.), Moscow, administer the Centers for Advanced Study and Education (CASE) program. The CASE program has established nine thematic research centers at regional Russian universities in order to foster scholarship in the social sciences and humanities. It seeks to integrate Russian scholars into the international academic community through a system of individual research fellowships, library and publications support, and professional community-building efforts. CASE program is currently funded by Carnegie Corporation of New York, the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, and the Ministry of Education of the Russian Federation.

In addition to its office in Washington, the Kennan Institute operates centers in Moscow and Kyiv. The Kennan Moscow Project and Kennan Kyiv Project provide on-the-ground assistance to the Washington staff and maintain contacts with various Russian and Ukrainian organizations. The offices organize publications, seminars, and conferences on important current themes featuring Kennan Institute alumni.

The Kennan Institute, as part of the Woodrow Wilson Center, is a nonpartisan institution that values its independence from the world of politics. Unlike most academic research centers, however, it seeks to promote dialogue between academic specialists and policymakers. To this end, the Institute convenes scholars, governmental specialists, and other experts to discuss political, social, and economic issues affecting Russia and the other successor states to the Soviet Union, seeking always to place these issues within their historical context.

DIRECTOR'S REVIEW

George Kennan's Siren Call

In the fall of 1988, after having just been invited to become director of the Kennan Institute, I arranged to spend a day in Princeton, New Jersey with Professor George Frost Kennan. The day, not surprisingly, turned out to be memorable for many reasons—not the least for my being able to have so much time with Professor Kennan.

Professor Kennan wanted to be sure that I shared his vision of what the Kennan Institute should be. He adamantly informed me that our institute should always be a place where scholars and the public talked not only about Russian economics, politics, and foreign policy, but about culture and history, literature and tradition as well. Most importantly, Professor Kennan forthrightly maintained that the Kennan Institute must remain an institution in which all of these different subjects and perspectives could blend together.

As the day came to an end—it was a beautiful autumnal day in Princeton with the crisp blue sky that one often gets in the American northeast at that time of year—I found myself strolling with then-84-year-old Professor Kennan toward the tiny railroad station next to campus to catch the shuttle train that runs back and forth between the town of Princeton and the mainline at Princeton Junction. Suddenly the conductor, who was probably as old as Professor Kennan, started honking on the little train's horn for us to move more quickly. Before I knew what was happening, I looked up to see George Kennan running in front of me to hold the train until I could catch up.

I am reminded of the image of Professor Kennan running after that train because it is, in may ways, a metaphor for much of his life, and for his relationship with Russia. Throughout nearly all of the 20th century, George F. Kennan was hearing sounds emanating from deep within Russia before any of the rest of us ever noticed. Like his ancestor George Kennan the Elder (after whom our institute is named) before him, George Kennan the Younger did not shy away when he heard these sounds; he ran towards them. Both George Kennans always embraced Russia and believed that Russia's embrace enriched them in return.

George Kennan the Younger ("our George Kennan") turned 100 on February 16, 2004. The institute he founded will turn 30 in just a few weeks in December 2004. This is a good moment, therefore, to reflect on the extent to which we have managed to live up to the high standards set by the institute's founders George F. Kennan, S. Frederick Starr, and James Billington.

If the Kennan Institute has been successful over the past thirty years, I would argue that it has been so at those moments when we too have chased sounds from across the Russian steppe. We've been able to do so because my remarkable predecessors—S. Frederick Starr, Abbott "Tom" Gleason, John Glad, Herbert J. Ellison and Peter Reddaway—and the dozens of people who have served on the Kennan Institute staff in Washington, Moscow and Kyiv, the hundreds of wonderful interns, and the more than 1,200 scholars who have worked at the Kennan Institute, have enabled us to honor Professor Kennan's challenge that the Kennan Institute always approach Russia in its entirety. Hopefully, in the process, we have both improved ourselves, and fulfilled our mission of improving understanding of Russia in the United States.

George F. Kennan, it is certain, enriched our country in many ways over the past century. He was a leading public servant and a great figure in twentieth century American letters. He taught and contributed to scholarship, and founded our little institute. He also happened to exert a remarkable influence over U.S. foreign policy. As a rising diplomat, George F. Kennan set down a strategy for American engagement with the Soviet Union that would last half a century. His approach to meeting the security threat of an expansionist Soviet Union after World War II offers key lessons for current policymakers grappling, in this radically different era, with challenges to international order from "rogue states."

Kennan was a senior State Department official in 1947 when he wrote the path-breaking Foreign Affairs article, published under the pseudonym "X", that advocated the "long-term, patient but firm and vigilant containment of Russian expansive tendencies" through "the adroit ...application of counter-force at a series of constantly shifting geographical and political points...." But this strategy was not merely a balance-of-power response to Stalin's emerging threat. At the core of Kennan's containment doctrine was a concept of domestic change for the Soviet Union—one that led him to prophesize accurately how the Cold War would one day end. In the "X" article, tellingly entitled "The Sources of Soviet Conduct," Kennan elucidated how "the political personality of Soviet power" would shape "Russia's conduct as a member of international society." Having been trained in Berlin during the 1920s as a Russianist, having watched the Soviet Union from next door in Latvia before the United States established diplomatic relations in 1933, and having traveled extensively within the USSR for more than a decade, Kennan had a grasp of Soviet reality unparalleled among his contemporaries. His genius at the time was in appreciating how ideas and other forces shaping Russian culture nurtured societal changes that would prove to be as important as missiles and tanks in the Cold War struggle.

For Kennan, containment was thus essentially a long-term holding strategy by the United States and its allies to balance Soviet power until the endemic internal contradictions of the Soviet system became unsustainable and precipitated change. His prediction came to pass in the late 1980s through the combination of successful U.S. containment (under President Ronald Reagan in its pivotal final phase), which raised the costs of Soviet adventurism, and the rise of a qualitatively different Soviet leader, Mikhail Gorbachev. Kennan declared the end of the Cold War in 1989, arguing that the Soviet Union under Gorbachev had evolved from a revolutionary expansionist state into an orthodox great power. Gorbachev's grand strategy—a form of regime change by internal evolution—was to integrate a transformed Soviet Union into the international order.

Although today's security challenges are wholly different from those of the Cold War (not least because non-state actors, such as Al Qaeda, fall outside Kennan's model), his approach to strategy nonetheless still offers a relevant guide. Just as his containment strategy took for its premise a concept of political change in the Soviet Union, so too must current U.S. strategies toward "rogue states" be based on a sound understanding of the unique "political personality" (to use Kennan's term) of each.

More importantly for the Kennan Institute, the sensibility inherent in Kennan's original formulation of containment sets standards for scholarly engagement with Russia, Ukraine, and the entire region in which they are found. Change takes place, though often in ways cloaked in disorienting complexity. The "universal" laws of social science theory apply to the region, at times producing unexpected outcomes as they are filtered through layers of history, culture, and experience. The writings of both nineteenth century satirical writer Nikolai Gogol' and twentieth century Nobel Laureate in Economic Sciences Simon Kuznets are necessary to understand how and why Ukraine has come to supply a quarter of the world's export market for railway cars, or how Cyprus has come to invest more in Russia since 1992 than the United States.

Throughout nearly all of the 20th century, George F. Kennan was hearing sounds emanating from deep within Russia before any of the rest of us ever noticed. Like his ancestor George Kennan the Elder (after whom our institute is named) before him, George Kennan the Younger did not shy away when he heard these sounds; he ran towards them.

Those of us charged with stewardship of the Kennan Institute over the 2003-04 program year have tried as best we could to implement Professor Kennan's vision for how one thinks about Russia and the region. We hosted 92 events, including conferences on the integration of Russian scholarship into the international academic community, Islam in Russia, the Ukrainian Man-Made Famine of 1932-33, and Russia and Northeast Asia; Title VIII-Supported Research Workshops on contemporary and historical perspectives on conflict in the former Soviet Union, multicultural legacies in Ukraine and Russia, and migration in Central Eurasia; a regular program of seminars and Noon Discussions: and alumni seminars and conferences in Russia and Ukraine. Over 3,600 people attended Kennan Institute public events throughout the program year. In addition, the Institute hosted 75 residential scholars and supported the work of 156 scholars in Russia through the CASE program.

Cooperative partners and generous funding agencies are essential to successful programming at an institution such as the Kennan Institute. I would like to acknowledge and express my heartfelt thanks for the generous support that we have received during the past year from Carnegie Corporation of New York, the U.S. Department of State through the Title VIII program and the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs, the U.S. Embassies in Moscow and Kyiv, the ISE Center in Moscow, the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, the Ministry of Education of the Russian Federation, the American Center in Moscow, the College of Arts and Sciences of Baylor University, the Embassy of Ukraine to the United States, the Environmental Film Festival, the Institute of Oriental Studies of the Russian Academy of Sciences, the Institute on Religion and World Affairs at Boston University, the International Research and Exchanges Board, the Kennan Institute/Woodrow Wilson Center Alumni Organization in Moscow, the National Council for Eurasian and East European Research, the Ukrainian Congress Committee of America, the Ukrainian Studies Center of the Harriman Institute at Columbia University, the University of Paris-X in Naterre, the U.S.-Ukraine Foundation, The Washington Group, and the Asia Program, Cold War International History Project, Comparative Urban Studies Project, Conflict Prevention Project, East European Studies, Environmental Change and Security Project, and Middle East Project of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars.

In addition to these program funds, the Kennan Institute is growing increasingly reliant on private donations to support our activities, whether through individual contributions or support of the Kennan Institute's annual dinner. I would like to take this opportunity to gratefully acknowledge the support of the following individuals and organizations that helped to ensure our continuing fiscal and programmatic health over this program year: A La Vieille Russie; Access Industries, Inc.; Eleanor Adams; Akin Gump Strauss Hauer & Feld; Madeleine Albright; Alfa-Bank; Anders Åslund; Adele Baker; Baker & Botts LLP; Harley Balzer and Marjorie Mandelstam Balzer; Nancy Bedford; Ruth Bell; Stephen F. In closing, I would like to acknowledge our remarkable staff in Washington, Moscow, and Kyiv, who do all the work, often without appropriate recognition. All of the accomplishments listed in the pages to follow are their achievements. If we have managed to convert Professor Kennan's vision for our institute into reality, it is the staff who has done so and it is they who have turned our words into deeds, our plans into reality every day of the past year: Muhitdin Ahunhodjaev, Ekaterina Alekseeva, Summer Brown, F. Joseph Dresen, Thecla Frazier, Jennifer Giglio, Pavel Korolev, Edita Krunkaityte, Galina Levina, Murad Pateev, Margaret Paxson, Irina Petrova, Nancy Popson, Yaroslav Pylynskyi, Claudia Roberts, Nataliya Samozvanova, Atiq Sarwari, Anna Toker, Erin Trouth, and S. ADVISORY COUNCILS

The Advisory Council advises the Kennan Institute on all scholarly aspects of its work. The Council reviews Title VIII-Supported Research Scholarship, Short-Term, and Central Eurasian Short-Term grant applications. Council members, who normally serve for four years, also assist the Institute individually by advising staff members and helping organize conferences. The Russian Alumni Association Advisory Council advises the Kennan Institute on the direction and form of alumni activities in the Russian Federation. The Ukrainian Alumni Association Advisory Council performs similar duties in Ukraine. Alumni Council members normally serve for two years and represent various regions of Russia and Ukraine. The members during the 2003–04 program year were:

KENNAN COUNCIL

For 30 years, the Kennan Institute has worked to improve American expertise and knowledge about Russia and the other successor states to the Soviet Union. To this end, the Institute brings together scholars, governmental specialists, and other experts to discuss political, social, and economic issues affecting this area of the world, seeking always to place these issues within their historical context.

Recognizing the need to build on the successes of the past, in 2001 the Institute established a private sector advisory board—the Kennan Council. Members are drawn from the worlds of business, finance, law, and public policy. The Kennan Council was founded with two goals in mind. First, it is intended to help ensure the financial strength of the Kennan Institute. Second, it enables the Institute to broaden its programming to inform and learn from the issues confronting the private sector in Russia, Ukraine, and the surrounding states. Members are asked to help identify which issues, whether political, social, or economic, are of the greatest concern to the private sector, and to help with fundraising.

The Kennan Institute has always brought together the worlds of academia and public policy in discussing Russia and the other successor states to the Soviet Union. The creation of the Kennan Council has allowed the Institute to bring the concerns and experience of the private sector into this discussion as well.

SCHOLARS

The Kennan Institute's residential fellowship program supports outstanding research on Russia and the successor states of the Soviet Union in the fields of the social sciences and the humanities. During the 2003-04 program year, the Institute offered nine types of grants: Woodrow Wilson Center Fellowships, Galina Starovoitova Fellowships on Human Rights and Conflict Resolution, Senior Scholarships, Senior Policy Scholarships, Public Policy Scholarships, Fulbright-Kennan Institute Research Scholarships, Title VIII Research Scholarships, Central Eurasian Short-Term (CEST) grants, and Short-Term grants. The competitive application process is open to qualified academic scholars as well as practitioners from government, media, and the private sector. All programs except Short-Term grants are limited to candidates with doctoral degrees or equivalent professional achievement.

The Fulbright-Kennan Institute Research Scholarship program, which began in September 2003, is funded by the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs (ECA) of the United States Department of State. ECA also funds the Galina Starovoitova Fellowship on Human Rights and Conflict Resolution. Research Scholarships and most Short-Term grants are funded by the Program for Research and Training on Eastern Europe and the Independent States of the Former Soviet Union (Title VIII), administered by the Bureau of Intelligence and Research of the Department of State. A number of Short-Term grants are also provided by the Kennan Institute's George F. Kennan Fund.

Kennan Institute scholars have direct access to libraries, research facilities, and human resources that are among the finest available in the United States. Resident scholars regularly participate in public lectures and seminars, specialized conferences, and informal presentations at the Institute and the Woodrow Wilson Center. The Institute provides a professional working environment where scholars forge links with American and international colleagues and institutions. Resident scholars have the opportunity to disseminate their research to a larger audience through the publications program of the Institute.

During the 2003–04 program year, the Kennan Institute hosted 75 resident scholars whose work included topics in politics, sociology, history, literature, economics, and the arts throughout the former Soviet Union. The Institute also supported the work of 156 scholars in Russia through the CASE Program (see pg. 20). The scholars at the Kennan Institute during the past year came from around the world and formed a community of scholars. This community of scholars contributed to the life of the Institute and helped to further American understanding of the social, political, and economic dynamics of the successor states to the Soviet Union.

I feel that my work was immeasurably advanced and improved by the time I was able to spend in Washington thanks to the Kennan Institute travel grant...I now return, reenergized with my new perspective and new material.

By simply providing the time and space for a recently minted Ph.D. to advance her or his research agenda, the Kennan Institute and its Title VIII program would be providing a service warranting the vociferous gratitude and loyalty of those offered this opportunity. But the Kennan Institute does much more than this; it establishes an environment wherein young scholars mix with more experienced scholars and where policy professionals and those formerly in government service impart perspectives rarely encountered in the 'ivory tower.'

Galina Starovoitova Fellowship on Human Rights and Conflict Resolution

The Galina Starovoitova Fellowship on Human Rights and Conflict Resolution was established following U.S. Secretary of State Madelieine Albright's 25 January 1999 speech in Moscow in which she announced a memorial fellowship at the Kennan Institute of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars in honor of Galina Starovoitova. The Fellowship is funded and administered in cooperation with the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs of the U.S. Department of State and the Public Affairs office of the U.S. Embassy in Moscow. Galina Starovoitova was a leading human rights advocate and a deputy in the Russian lower house of parliament (Duma). She won her Duma seat from St. Petersburg in Russia's December 1995 legislative elections. Starovoitova served in the Congress of Peoples' Deputies during 1989-91 and was a presidential advisor on ethnic relations until 1992. She was a co-founder of the Democratic Russia movement. In 1989, Galina Starovoitova was a visiting scholar at the Kennan Institute. She was also a fellow in the Jennings Randolph Program at the United States Institute for Peace during 1993-1994, where she completed research on self-determination movements in the former Soviet Union, and a visiting professor at Brown University. In keeping with both the legacies of Woodrow Wilson and Galina Starovoitova, the Starovoitova Fellowship is available to prominent scholars or policy makers from the Russian Federation who have successfully bridged the worlds of ideas and public affairs to advance human rights and conflict resolution.

George Frost Kennan at 100; Kennan Institute at 30

George Frost Kennan was born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin on February 16, 1904. He was named for a cousin of his grandfather, a famed 19th century American expert on the Russian Empire. Kennan "the Elder" went to Russia on a mission in 1865 to survey a telegraph line across Siberia to reach Europe. While in Siberia, the expedition received word that a trans-Atlantic cable had been successfully connected, putting them out of business. Kennan turned this failure into a personal success by writing of his experiences in a book, launching a career in journalism, and eventually becoming America's foremost expert on imperial Russia. George Frost Kennan, who shares his birthdate with the elder Kennan, developed his interest in Russia and the Russian people in a very different way. He was given the opportunity early in his career with the State Department to study Russian and Russian history in Berlin, before the United States had established diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union. He seized that opportunity and, like his ancestor, went on to become one of his nation's foremost experts on Russia. In the late 1940s, Kennan "the Younger" penned two seminal documents, the "Long Telegram" and the "X Article," that set out a strategy of containing the Soviet Union until the contradictions within the Soviet system would force a change or collapse of the regime. This concept shaped American foreign policy for the next four decades until the collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991.

While Kennan was a staunch opponent to the Soviet system, he was and remains a devoted scholar of Russia. In 1974, he helped establish the Kennan Institute at the Woodrow Wilson Center because he was concerned that American study of Soviet Russia concentrated too much on the political and security aspects of our relationship, and neglected the scholarship on history and culture that would help us better understand Russia. That the Kennan Institute is named for Kennan's ancestor is a symbol of his commitment to a comprehensive and long-term approach to Russian studies.

In 2004 the Kennan Institute commemorated George F. Kennan's centennial year with two important events. In February, the Institute hosted a roundtable in Moscow of prominent scholars exploring Kennan's legacy from the Russian perspective. Panelists Nikolai Bolkhovitnov, Vladimir Pechatnov, Viktor Malkov, Aleksei Arbatov, and Anatolii Utkin explained that while Kennan was a committed adversary of the Soviet government, he was a staunch advocate of improving understanding between the people of the Soviet Union and the United States.

In March, the Kennan Institute annual benefit dinner commemorated Ambassador Kennan's 100th birthday, the 70th anniversary of the reestablishment of diplomatic ties with Moscow (a mission on which George F. Kennan served as translator), and the 30th anniversary of the establishment of the Kennan Institute. Secretary of State Colin Powell, in addressing the gathering, commended Ambassador Kennan's patience and vision in his scholarship and policymaking on Russia. In the closing address at the dinner, Russian Ambassador to the United States Yuri Ushakov reflected on his encounters with Ambassador Kennan, declaring "It's no wonder that Ambassador Kennan is now regarded in my country not only as the architect of the policy of containment, but also as a visionary who foretold major modern international trends. And he did it at a time when others were unable to see the signs of coming change."

CENTERS FOR ADVANCED STUDY AND EDUCATION

In 1998, Carnegie Corporation of New York, with the support of the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, invited the Kennan Institute's Blair A. Ruble and Nancy Popson, together with Susan Bronson, formerly of the Social Science Research Council, to prepare a study about how best to protect the welfare of the intelligentsia of the former Soviet Union, especially in its regional universities. Their report in 1999, entitled The Humanities and Social Sciences in the Former Soviet Union: An Assessment of Need, formed the basis for a partner-ship between Carnegie Corporation, the Ministry of Education of the Russian Federation, MacArthur Foundation, and the Open Society Institute that led to the establishment of Russian Centers for Advanced Study and Education (CASEs) in 2000.

Higher education in Russia has faced a number of problems in the post-Soviet period, but one of the most serious has been the absence of national and international networks uniting both institutions and individual scholars. The goal of the CASE program is to develop an "invisible university" that would foster these networks in the social sciences and humanities. The program is administered jointly by the Kennan Institute and the ISE Center (Information. Scholarship. Education) in Moscow, and directed by an international advisory board.

The CASE program recognizes that higher education, in the words of Carnegie Corporation president Vartan Gregorian, "is our connection with the future. It is in institutions of higher education where the best minds of every culture and country ask the questions that will lead to advances in social, scientific and governmental policies, and the development of science and philosophy—the kinds of breakthroughs that will advance a nation."

Nine thematic Centers have been established at regional Russian Universities:

Far Eastern National University (Vladivostok) "Russia and the Asia-Pacific Region: Security Dilemmas, Conflicts, and Cooperation in the Twenty-First Century;"

Irkutsk State University, "Siberia in the Russian and Global Contexts: Traditions Modernization Patterns, and Challenges of Globalization;"

Kaliningrad State University (Baltic CASE), "Russia and Expanding Europe: Cultural, Political, Economic, and Social Forms of Collaboration;"

Novgorod State University, "State, Society, and Individuals in Russia: Cultural and Educational Interactions;"

Rostov State University, "Russia's Modernization: Economic, Political, Social, and Cultural Dimensions of the Transition;"

Saratov State University, "Phenomenology of Power in Russia: State, Society, and the Individual;"

Tomsk State University, "Cultural, Social, Economic and Legal Implications of Russia's Integration into the Global Community;"

Urals State University (Ekaterinburg), "Tolerance as a Philosophical, Psychological, and Political Issue in Contemporary Russia;"

Voronezh State University, "Cross-Cultural Communication: Its Philological, Anthropological, Historical and Regional Dimensions."

In addition, a CASE Resource Center was opened at St. Petersburg State University to support the research of CASE affiliated scholars and St. Peterburg educational, cultural, and archival institutions.

The CASE program seeks to promote advanced research in the social sciences and humanities in Russia through a system of individual research fellowships, library and publications support, and professional community-building efforts. Over 450 scholars from across Russia have received research support through this system. Each CASE has built up a substantial library of Russian and foreign literature related to its intellectual theme. In addition, the CASEs have supported numerous conferences and publications.

In the upcoming year, the Kennan Institute plans to conduct thematic workshops involving CASE-affiliated scholars and other scholars from around the world who are engaged in similar research in order to deepen CASE interaction with the broader international academic community. These workshops will foster intensive interaction around specific research agendas.

Kurbatova, M. V. (Kemerovo). "An Institutional Model of Interaction

Introducing Russian Centers for Advanced Study and Education (CASEs) to an American Audience

The Kennan Institute, National Council for Eurasian and East European Research, and ISE Center (Information. Scholarship. Education.) hosted a conference on September 30-October 1, 2003 that brought together members of the U.S. academic and policy communities and Russian scholars representing regional state universities throughout the country. The conference highlighted the early results of the Russian Centers for Advanced Study and Education (CASE) program. The CASE program supports high-quality research in the social sciences and humanities and promotes the establishment of active academic communities throughout Russia. According to Vartan Gregorian, President of Carnegie Corporation of New York, "The nine regional CASE Centers have truly become what we had all hoped—the foundation for the renewal of a vibrant intellectual life in Russia; not just in Moscow and St. Petersburg, but throughout Russia."The conference featured presentations by representatives of the nine CASEs on topics pertinent to the CASE themes, including Russian regional politics, intercultural and interethnic relations, and Russian relations with the West. Speakers addressed both the theoretical foundations of these areas of study and the practical issues facing Russia at home and in the international arena. In addition, representatives of several CASEs explained how their Centers are addressing these important issues through research and scholarship.

Representatives of the U.S. academic community, the Russian Ministry of Education, and several funding organizations discussed the future of education and scholarship in Russia and possibilities for integration into global education space. They identified a number of problems in Russia's system of higher education that must be addressed, including: demographic decline in Russia, the lack of a system of accreditation, outdated teaching methods, and incompatibility with the educational systems of other countries. Several speakers argued that these problems might be resolved by more creatively and effectively using the limited resources that are currently available in the Russian education system. A luncheon on October 1 featured keynote remarks from Gregorian, as well as Lee H. Hamilton, President and Director of the Woodrow Wilson Center, and Mikhail Strikhanov, Deputy Minister of Education of the Russian Federation. All three speakers agreed that a vibrant system of higher education is crucial to Russia's future social, political, and economic development, and that promoting educational development is one of the most important forms of aid that the United States can offer to Russia. They praised the CASE program for fostering international academic cooperation and creating dynamic academic communities within Russia. "With the CASE program and similar efforts to develop Russia's higher education, we act to ensure that the world enjoys the benefit of Russian wisdom and creativity and talent in the generations to come. And we bring our peoples closer together," said Hamilton.

This two-day conference successfully introduced the CASE program to an interested American audience. During the upcoming year, in an effort to foster more intensive interaction around specific research agendas and deepen CASE interaction with the broader international social scientific community, the Kennan Institute plans to conduct a series of thematic workshops involving CASE-affiliated scholars and other scholars from around the world who are engaged in similar research. These workshop groups (focusing on the themes of: Russia and the world, diverse cultures in contemporary societies, and state and society relations in transitional societies) will each convene several times and each will result in the publication of a multi-national, inter-generational, and cross-disciplinary volume.

Scholars Explore the Impact of Americans on Russia

Relations between the United States and Russia have always been both highly complex and extremely important for both countries. During the past year, the Kennan Institute has hosted several scholars who studied on the impact that Americans, American culture, and U.S. policies have had on Russia and the Soviet Union. Topics have ranged from U.S. aid to the Soviet Union during the famine of the 1920s to American cultural expositions in the Soviet Union.

Natalia Reshetova, a historian from the Institute of Russian History of the Russian Academy of Sciences, came to the Institute to study the 1921 famine in Soviet Russia and American aid. She concluded that American help to Russia can be considered as an important international factor that "softened" the negative consequences of the civil war. Similarly, Bertrand Patenaude, a Research Fellow at the Hoover Institution, while presenting his book The Big Show in Bololand: The American Relief Expedition to the Soviet Russia in the Famine of 1921, discussed a historical account of the Soviet famine of 1921. He stated that the Soviet government could not cope with the calamity and the American Relief Administration was invited in to "stave off disaster." Challenges facing the relief effort came from individual relief workers, the obstructionism of the Soviet government, and the population itself.

On the political-diplomatic side of U.S.-Russian relations, Martin Halliwell, from the University of Leicester, U.K., researched the intellectual relationship of George Kennan and Reinhold Niebuhr during their work in the State Department in 1947, their perceptions of Russian communism, and its impact on U.S. foreign policy. Halliwell's research has shown that Niebuhr did not directly influence Cold War policy, but did help to establish the rhetoric by which the relationship between the United States and the Soviet Union was framed. Another scholar, Patricia Herlihy, a research professor from the Watson Institute for International Relations at Brown University, worked on a biography of Eugene Schuyler, an American diplomat who served as a Consul, Consul General and Chargé d'Affaires at the U.S. missions in Moscow and St. Petersburg, among other posts. She found out that his knowledge of Russian and his social skills enabled him to gain access to confidential material, which he relayed to Washington.

The Kennan Institute hosted a seminar with David Engerman, Assistant Professor at the Department of History at Brandeis University, where he discussed his new book Modernization from the Other Shore: American Intellectuals and the Romance of Russian Development. In his book, Engerman devoted considerable attention to the Soviet Union's Five Year Plan and the resulting famine and the writings of George Kennan "the Elder" and his great nephew George F. Kennan. Engerman explained that America's Russia watchers from across the political spectrum were entranced by the transformation of the "Empire of Peasants" into a modern industrial power. He stressed that many justified the financial and human costs as a small price to pay for building an industrial society.

Fulbright-Kennan Institute Research Scholar Sergei Zhuravlev's project focused on those Americans who migrated to the Soviet Union during the 1930s. American émigrés to the Soviet Union included many committed Communists, but the majority were simply in search of work. Zhuravlev identified dozens of American expatriates who were arrested or killed in Stalin's xenophobic purges. Through extensive archival research on American purge victims, he determined that they were a highly diverse group of people who were motivated to immigrate to the Soviet Union for a variety of political, economic, and ideological reasons.

Eleonory Gilburd, a doctoral candidate at the University of California, Berkeley, studied foreign culture in the Soviet Union. She found that not only was America represented at fairs and exhibitions in the Soviet Union by Russian émigrés, but their opinions and observations contributed to the formation of the U.S. perceptions of Soviet citizenry.

MEETINGS

The Kennan Institute sponsors an extensive program of meetings that bring together experts from academia, government, business, and the media in a non-partisan forum. The majority of meetings are open to the public; speakers and audience engage in dialogue on a broad range of issues regarding Russia, Ukraine, and surrounding states.

Weekly noon discussions allow scholars and experts to present their research findings to a diverse and challenging audience. Seminars and colloquia provide opportunities for more lengthy discussions of new research, and policy forums provide an opportunity to demonstrate how research results funded by the Title VIII program can be applied to contemporary policy issues affecting U.S. relations with Russia and the surrounding states. Noon discussions and seminars are covered regularly by the Voice of America as well as by journalists from the print and television media, including C-SPAN TV.

In addition to noon discussions and seminars, the Institute organizes conferences and convenes small workshops to bring together leading experts to examine specialized topics in depth. Numerous informal discussions give scholars in the Woodrow Wilson Center community ample opportunity to trade ideas and get to know one another, and often provide a Russianlanguage forum for visiting Russian scholars to discuss topics in the social sciences and humanities with resident scholars.

The Ukrainian Man-Made Famine of 1932–33

In November, the Kennan Institute hosted a conference on the Ukrainian Famine of 1932–33. Cosponsored by the Embassy of Ukraine to the United States, the Ukrainian Congress Committee of America, and the U.S.-Ukraine Foundation, the event examined new historical data about the Ukrainian famine, the international reaction to the famine, and how the famine fits in the context of our understanding of genocide.

In her remarks to the conference, Paula Dobriansky, Undersecretary for Global Affairs, U.S. Department of State, noted that "each year, we learn more and more about the famine in Ukraine. Even so, it is still difficult to grasp the enormity of the tragedy: millions of people, in what was the breadbasket of the then-Soviet Union, were quite literally starved to death." Historians have long known that the Soviet Union exported grain harvested in Ukraine and other agricultural centers during Joseph Stalin's forced collectivization of agriculture in the early 1930s in order to finance the rapid industrialization of the Soviet Union. New evidence from Russian and Ukrainian archives now suggests that it was Stalin's intent to use starvation as a weapon against perceived potential enemies in Ukraine.

According to Yuri Shapoval of the Institute of Political and Ethnonational Studies in Kyiv, Stalin feared that the Ukrainian Communist Party was penetrated by Polish agents and believed that "nationalist tendencies" in the Ukrainian peasantry guaranteed their disloyalty to the Soviet state. Soviet officials used this perception of disloyalty to justify "special measures" used in Ukraine, such as confiscation of all food or cutting off all supplies from a farm or village. James Mace of University of Kyiv-Mohyla Academy argued that the state-organized mass killing of the rural population combined with the attempted destruction of Ukrainian culture amounts to genocide against the Ukrainian nation. He noted that blockades were imposed to keep food from going in to Ukraine, and to keep starving Ukrainians inside. At the same time, leading elements of Ukrainian society were imprisoned or killed.

"Political and Economic Transformations in Russia and Ukraine," Aleksei Alekseev, Senior Research Fellow, Institute of Economy and Organization of Industrial Production, Siberian Branch, Russian Academy of Abbott Gleason of Brown University agreed that new evidence demonstrated that Ukraine was singled out as a target of Stalin's ire. He cautioned that the strictest interpretation of genocide—the intention to exterminate the entire population—does not seem to fit with Stalin's desire to mold Ukraine into a "model Soviet Republic." Mace and Shapoval responded by pointing out that a famine in the Russian Volga region was met with government assistance, whereas the North Caucasus—an area with a substantial Ukrainian population—was targeted with many of the same special measures used in Ukraine. Stalin's plan for Ukraine as a "model Soviet Republic" envisioned the destruction of Ukrainian culture and the deaths of all who would cling to that culture.

The conference speakers wrestled with the issue of international reaction to the famine. Panelists Eugene Fishel of the U.S. Department of State and independent scholar Leonard Leshuk agreed that there were accurate news accounts of the famine. However, these were largely drowned out by positive media coverage of the Soviet Union by journalists seeking to curry favor with the Soviet government—such as Walter Duranty of the New York Times. Fishel noted that the U.S. government, like other governments, viewed the famine as a strictly internal matter. Moreover, the U.S. government was in negotiations to open diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union, and did not wish to lose a potentially important market for U.S. industrial goods.

The final panel attempted to put the Ukrainian famine in the broader context of man-made famines throughout history. Frank Chalk of Concordia University, Montreal, Gregory Stanton of Genocide Watch, and David Marcus of Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann and Bernstein, LLP discussed the use of famine as a weapon and Ukraine's famine in comparison to other famines that have been classified as genocide. They noted the similarity of the Ukrainian famine to famines in China and Cambodia, all of which were used as a means of revolutionary social engineering. The panel concluded that international legislation is needed to criminalize inflicting or creating conditions for famine.

Activities of the Kennan Moscow Project

The 2003-04 program year was marked by several important anniversaries: the 100th birthday of George F. Kennan, the 70th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the United States and the USSR, and the 30th anniversary of the Kennan Institute. The Kennan Moscow Project marked these occasions with two scholarly gatherings.

The first of these was a roundtable discussion dedicated to the life and career of George F. Kennan. On February 16—Kennan's birthday—the Kennan Moscow Project brought together historians Nikolai Bolkhovitinov (a former Guest Scholar at the Wilson Center), Vladimir Pechatnov (a former Wilson Center Fellow), Viktor Mal'kov, and Anatolii Utkin. Also on the panel was well-known international security expert and corresponding member of the Russian Academy of Sciences Aleksei Arbatov (also a former Guest Scholar at the Wilson Center), who noted that Kennan, more than any other observer, "sensed the unbreakable connection between the external and internal life of Russia," and therefore his ideas remain relevant to this day. Arbatov called on the West to understand that for Russia, foreign policy has been and remains largely determined by the path of its internal development. "Which states Russia will cooperate with depends on how the country will develop in the economic and political realm," he noted. Therefore, according to Arbatov, the West should open its economic, political, and military institutions and allow Russia to become fully integrated, but only if Russia meets very strict requirements in its domestic political and economic development.

The second event was the ninth annual conference for alumni of Kennan Institute programs. The conference, which was held in June 2004 in a Moscow suburb, was dedicated to "Russian-American Relations in the Conditions of Globalization." Participants included alumni of Kennan Institute programs, as well as of other academic exchange programs funded by the U.S. Department of State. More than 70 historians, political scientists, economists, legal scholars, and even scholars of literature from all over Russia came together to discuss this important topic. As Margaret Paxson (Kennan Institute) noted during the opening session, "In international programs like ours, we are more than the sum of our parts...! see daily how the deep and real connections we have made with each other give life to the biggest questions we ask: 'who are we?' and 'where are we going?' It is an inspiration to see." Conference participants discussed the historical and cultural foundations of Russian-American relations, as well as their geopolitical, economic, and security aspects. Special prominence was given to Russian and American approaches to the war on terrorism.

In addition to these two events, the Kennan Moscow Project also held several additional events on a variety of topics. One notable event was a one-day conference on "Reformism in Russian Islam: Past and Present" held in February 2004 and cosponsored with the Institute of Oriental Studies of the Russian Academy of Sciences. This conference was intended as a continuation of a similar conference on Islam in Russia held in November 2003 at the Kennan Institute in Washington. According to Rustem Shukurov, an Associate Professor in the Department of History at Moscow State University and a participant in both the Moscow and Washington conferences, the goals of the conference included "identifying not only new tendencies in the reformation of Islam, but also their historical roots and traditions of modernization that are uniquely Russian in character." Other conference participants included leading Russian scholars on Islam, representatives of leading Islamic organizations, as well as the architects of a concept for modernization in Russian Islam.

Evgeny Tsymbal, whose most recent film Dziga and His Brothers won Russia's 16th national Nika Award for Best Documentary. The dramatic fate of the Kaufman brothers—the three great cinematographers who are the subject of the film—formed the basis of Tsymbal's remarks on the topic of "Self-Identification and the Demands on Artists in the 20th Century." The life stories of Dziga Vertov and Boris and Mikhail Kaufman, who struggled with self-identification in a difficult transitional period while trying to create innovative art, span the pre-revolutionary and Soviet periods in Russia, Europe, and the United States. Although they were ethnically Jewish—forced to survive in different countries, political systems, and social roles, and familiar with both success and injustice—Tsymbal argued that the Kaufman brothers considered themselves first and foremost to be cinematographers and artists not limited by their nationality or by the borders of the countries they worked in.

PUBLICATIONS

The Kennan Institute and the Woodrow Wilson Center are philosophically and operationally committed to broad dissemination of the research they sponsor by means of books, Special Reports, Conference Reports, Occasional Papers, Kennan Briefs, and Meeting Reports.

In conjunction with the Wilson Center Press, the Kennan Institute publishes both monographs and essay collections. Special Reports are booklets that summarize research findings intended for general dissemination or that document the institutional history of the Institute. Conference Reports are summaries of major conferences, often including a collection of the papers presented at conference sessions. Occasional Papers are reports on completed research projects or works-in-progress. Submitted by resident scholars, visiting speakers, and workshop participants, these papers are normally longer than standard journal articles and are aimed primarily at an audience of specialists. An average of two to five Occasional Papers are published each program year. Kennan Briefs are short, policy-relevant reports by workshop participants or resident scholars. Meeting Reports are single-page summaries of those Institute lectures of greatest relevance to the general public and the policy-making community. The Institute publishes two such reports for each month from October through June.

Although the composition of annual Kennan Institute publications has varied over the past thirty years, three main components have always comprised the foundation of the Institute's publishing profile: commercially published books (generally the final product of conferences and workshops organized by the Institute, or based on the research of resident scholars and staff members); Occasional Papers, representing contemporary research on topics of historical and current interest by leading scholars in the field; and Meeting Reports, which document presentations of scholars and specialists at the Institute.

With the exception of books, all Institute publications are offered to the public free of charge and are regularly distributed to individuals, university libraries, and companies throughout the United States, Europe, Russia, and other states in the region. Most publications are also available on the Kennan Institute website at www.wilsoncenter.org/kennan.

Meeting Reports are the heart of the Institute's publication program; together with the Institute's monthly calendar, these reports were received by a readership that exceeded 6,300 in 2004. This readership included scholars and researchers at universities and research institutions worldwide, as well as U.S. government officials, and professionals, such as lawyers and businessmen. By far the most popular publication the Institute produces, Meeting Reports are used widely in college classrooms in the United States and serve to keep scholars and professionals throughout the United States, Europe, Latin America, Asia, Russia, and the successor states to the Soviet Union in touch with current research in the field.

Dialogue Programs on Russia and the Surrounding States

Dialogue is an award-winning weekly radio program produced at the Woodrow Wilson Center that explores the world of ideas through weekly, half-hour conversations with renowned public figures, scholars, journalists, and authors. For the last 15 years, Dialogue has offered its listeners informed discussion on important ideas and issues in national and international affairs, history, and culture—providing commentary that goes beyond the superficial analysis presented in many of today's talk shows.

As of spring 2002, in collaboration with Northern Virginia Public Television and MHz NET-WORKS, Dialogue is now a television series. The series aims to provide foreign perspectives on world affairs—with presidents, ambassadors, cabinet ministers and scholars as guests. For program information, please send e-mail to: dialogue@wwic.si.edu, or call (202) 691-4070.

FUNDING

The Kennan Institute receives funding from both public and private sources. During the 2003-04 program year, a grant from Carnegie Corporation of New York provided 50 percent of the Kennan Institute's total operating budget; the Woodrow Wilson Center's annual federal appropriation provided 27 percent; the Program for Research and Training on Eastern Europe and the Independent States of the Former Soviet Union (Title VIII) of the U.S. Department of State, 8 percent; the George F. Kennan Fund, 9 percent; other U.S. Government sources, including the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs of the Department of State and the U.S. Embassies in Moscow and Kyiv, 3 percent. The remainder of the Institute's income was derived from private donations, including 2 percent through the Kennan Council.

The Role of Religion in Post-Soviet Societies

The fall of the Soviet Union revealed a diverse, multi-cultural body emerging from the ruins of the old order. The diversity within this vast territory is reflected in a tapestry of languages, ethnic groups, enduring traditional social and economic organizations, and, perhaps most surprisingly after decades of state atheism, a wide range of religions and religious practices. For generations, the extent to which religious beliefs endured or shifted in the climate of an anti-religious state was impossible to know. It is now clear that the official atheism of the Soviet state did not cause people to summarily drop their beliefs in God, their sacred calendars, or their venerative practices and rituals. Although physical churches, synagogues, and mosques were destroyed in the seventy years of Soviet rule, the profound belief systems that are at the heart of religious practice continue to live on.

Religious affiliations and identities are experiencing a rapid resurgence in the former Soviet Union. In a post-1991 climate of new state formation, local authoritarianism, concerns over the meanings of democracy and the ethics of the new economy, and—in far too many instances—of poverty and war, religion has emerged as an affiliation of growing prominence. An increasing number of people are looking through the framework of religion in order to understand the world around them. Religion touches upon all spheres of social, political, and cultural life, and its resurgence profoundly affects the definition and shaping of broader social movements as well as individual behaviors. In a region in flux, questions of religion also relate to issues of national and international security.

At the Kennan Institute, the subject of religion in the post-Soviet context has emerged as a central theme in conferences, presentations, and State Department Policy Forums. On November 5, 2003, the Institute hosted a conference that brought together Russian and U.S. experts to discuss the role of Islamic identity and ideology in Russian society historically and today. Speakers discussed a number of issues, including the potential for integration of Muslims into Russian society, the existence of a distinctly Russian variety of Islam, and the danger of radical political Islam in Russia. In January 2004, an Institute book launch featured former Title VIII-Supported Scholar Chris Chulos' Converging Worlds: Religion and Community in Peasant Russia 1861-1917 (2003); Sergei Zhuk, also a former Title VIII-Supported Research Scholar, published his monograph, Russia's Lost Reformation: Peasants, Millennialism, and Radical Sects in Southern Russia and Ukraine, 1830-1917 (2004). In addition, Galina Staravoitova Fellow Anatoly Krasikov worked on the theme, "Religious Freedom as a Condition for Revival of Russia in the 21st Century" while in residence at the Institute, and presented his work in an April 2004 Noon Discussion.

In March 2004 the Kennan Institute hosted a workshop on "Orthodoxy and the Construction of Civil Society and Democracy in Russia," which was organized by Christopher Marsh of Baylor University and Elizabeth Prodromou of Boston University. The workshop brought together scholars and political and ecclesiastical leaders from Russia and the West to foster an informed debate and promote rigorous examination of the role of religion and civil society in contemporary Russia. It featured a keynote address by Librarian of Congress James Billington.

Kyiv's Immigrant Communities

In August 2004, Serhiy Brytechenko, the head of the Presidential Administration's Migration Directorate, called attention to increasing immigration into Ukraine in an article appearing in Uryadovyy Kuryer, the newspaper of the Ukrainian Cabinet Ministers. Brytchenko reported that the number of people granted Ukrainian citizenship rose by 40 percent during the first six months of 2004 in comparison to the same period in 2003, and by 180 percent in comparison to the first half of 2002. The Ministry of Internal Affairs similarly observed an increase in applications for permanent residence, the initial step towards Ukrainian citizenship. He continued on to note that the number of people adopting Ukrainian citizenship substantially surpassed the number relinquishing Ukrainian citizenship. Ukraine was, in short, becoming a country that was increasingly attractive to foreigners and persons without citizenship.

Ukraine's relatively liberal immigration and citizenship laws account for part of this attraction to be sure. There is more to this interesting story, however. With some notable exceptions, Ukraine provides arriving immigrants from abroad with opportunities for peaceful and productive lives. This finding—perhaps surprising to many—becomes evident from an examination of how individual immigrants live in the Ukrainian capital of Kyiv, as evidenced by the results of a 2001-02 survey conducted by the Kennan Kyiv project.

The Kennan Kyiv Project survey—funded by the Kennan Institute's George F. Kennan Fund and conducted with the assistance of the U.S.-Ukraine Foundation and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) in Ukraine—focused on immigrants from Africa, Asia, and the Middle East. This group has become a small but significant portion of the population of Kyiv. The survey consisted of three interrelated parts: a questionnaire for immigrants, a survey of Kyiv city residents, and an experts' survey of officials from various government levels and specialists who have regular contact or work directly with nontraditional immigrants. Survey questions focused on the main characteristics of immigrants in Kyiv, their living conditions, interethnic relations, and the attitude of Kyiv city residents and the municipal government toward them.

How Kyiv and Ukraine come to terms with their new residents will reveal a great deal about what sort of city and country Kyiv and Ukraine will be in the decades ahead. New arrivals though they may be, the immigrants at the center of this study are essential to Ukraine's future. The study's results show both a tolerant and liberal Ukraine, and a poor and miserly country unable to capitalize on its own resources. Understanding how Kyiv assimilates its immigrant community—or does not do so—carries important information about what sort of state and society Ukraine will become.

The results of this study, containing extensive sociological data on Kyiv's nontraditional immigrant communities, were published in Ukrainian by the Kennan Kyiv Project and Stylos in 2003. The Kennan Institute and the Comparative Urban Studies Project of the Woodrow Wilson Center published an abridged version of the study results in English in May 2004. Copies of Nontraditional Immigrants in Kyiv may be requested from the Kennan Institute, and the publication is available for download at www.wilsoncenter.org/kennan.

ABOUT THE CENTER

The Center is the living memorial of the United States of America to the nation's twenty-eighth president, Woodrow Wilson. Congress established the Woodrow Wilson Center in 1968 as an international institute for advanced study, "symbolizing and strengthening the fruitful relationship between the world of learning and the world of public affairs." The Center opened in 1970 under its own board of trustees.

In all its activities the Woodrow Wilson Center is a nonprofit, nonpartisan organization, supported financially by annual appropriations from Congress, and by the contributions of foundations, corporations, and individuals. Conclusions or opinions expressed in Center publications and programs are those of the authors and speakers and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Center staff, fellows, trustees, advisory groups, or any individuals or organizations that provide financial support to the Center.
