What's at Stake

500 legislators, Cámara de Diputados (300 RM and 200 PR).

15 state governors.

30 state legislatures (1,063 state deputies).

1,926 local governments in 30 states.

President Lopez Obrador's transformation project: his party and party allies' legislative majority.

Mexico's electoral institutions and other autonomous organisms (?)

What to Expect

Turnout in mid-term elections has been below 50%. I expect that the 15 state elections might boost it to around 50%.

Morena likely to win various state elections (8 or 9 out of 15).
The largest number of female candidates for state-governor expected to win.

Majority for Morena is uncertain (voters and rules play a role). The Mexican election is very complex (partial alliances in districts and states, rules of translating votes into legislative seats, issues of enforcement of election laws, not to mention political violence).

We can confidently say that this is one of the most politically polarized elections we have seen.

Changes in the Mexican Electorate

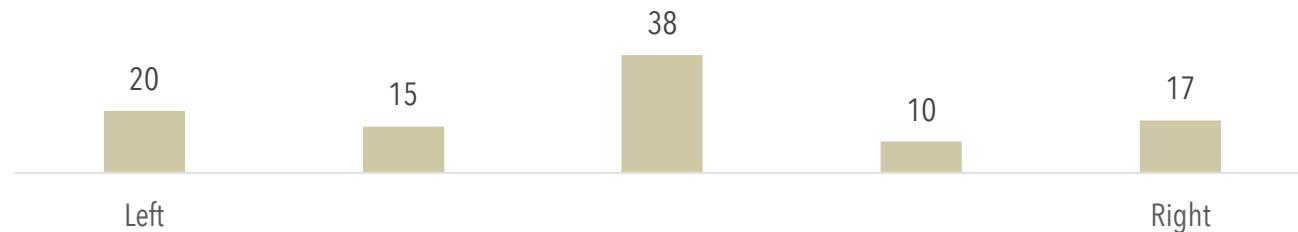

The electorate has been undergoing a long process of partisan dealignment, which means that today there are fewer loyal voters, more non partisan voters, and thus more volatility and more electoral uncertainty.

Political polarization is not new, it follows an election-cycle pattern. The extremes of the political spectrum tend to grow around presidential elections (more polarization) and the electorate moderates in non-election times.

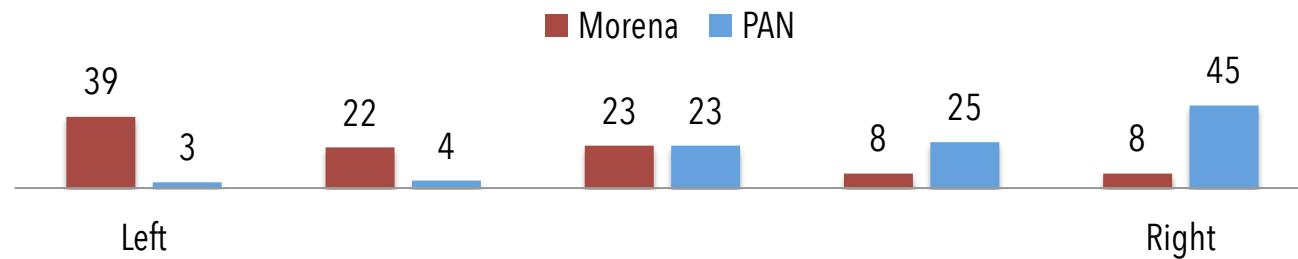

But partisan groups have become more polarized over time regardless of those election-cycles.

3. This is party polarization, no just party sorting.

Partisans (party sorting)

Strong partisans (partisan polarization)

This is why we see more polarized patterns of presidential approval ratings, among other measures of public opinion.
