The Southern Voices Network for Peacebuilding

Eliciting and Applying Local Knowledge for Peacebuilding and State-building in Africa

About the Southern Voices Network for Peacebuilding

The Southern Voices Network for Peacebuilding (SVNP) is a consortium of research and policy organizations from across Africa. The network seeks to foster dialogue and increase the visibility of African perspectives within the U.S. policy arena. The goal of the network is to support the development of informed and mutually-beneficial U.S.-Africa policy. The SVNP achieves this by:

• Hosting scholars from the network for a 3-month residency at the Wilson Center in Washington, D.C.
• Organizing first-class conferences that link members to one another and to U.S. policymakers and practitioners
• Producing best-in-class policy analysis through briefs, reports, and posts on the Africa Program blog, Africa Up Close

The Southern Voices Network for Peacebuilding was established in 2011 with the generous support of the Carnegie Corporation of New York.

Southern Voices Conferences

The Africa Program hosts annual conferences both in Washington, D.C. and on the continent to promote dialogue within the network and share important recommendations and ideas with a wider audience. It is our hope that such collaborations will be a positive contribution to Global North and Global South policy debates.

2017 Annual Conference Objectives

The primary objective of the annual conference is to bring together key policy and research institutes from the African continent in order to provide an avenue for African voices to inform the U.S. policy dialogue around peacebuilding and state-building in Africa. This year, the conference dialogue focused on the theme “Peacebuilding in Africa – What Works?”

Through a four-day series of training, planning, and policy sessions, the annual conference aims to afford participants the opportunity to meet with select U.S. policymakers working on U.S.-Africa relations; to enhance individual, organization, and network capacities and outreach through capacity-building workshops; to strengthen intra-SVNP collaboration; and to facilitate strategic thinking on issues critical to Africa and U.S.-Africa relations.

This publication was made possible by a grant from the Carnegie Corporation of New York. The statements made and views expressed in this paper are solely the responsibility of the authors and do not represent the views of the Wilson Center or the Carnegie Corporation of New York.

Dear Southern Voices Network for Peacebuilding Members and Friends:

On July 10-13, 2017, the Wilson Center Africa Program hosted the Southern Voices Network for Peacebuilding (SVNP) Annual Conference in Washington, DC. The conference brought together 21 representatives from the SVNP member organizations as well as 10 external speakers and approximately 160 members of the public who joined us for conference events. Through a series of plenary and policy sessions, participants were able to discuss key aspects of the conference theme: “Peacebuilding in Africa – What Works?”

Since 2011, the Southern Voices Network for Peacebuilding has worked to foster connections between members and U.S. and African policymakers, build member capacity, and amplify African voices in the policy space around issues of peacebuilding. The annual conference is a key component of the SVNP, providing an opportunity for members to come together, update each other, share best practices, and build relationships across the network to lay the foundation for future collaborative projects.

This year’s four-day-long conference in Washington provided a platform for constructive dialogue featuring African and U.S. experts who shared their depth and breadth of experience in the peacebuilding space. External speakers joined us from U.S. Government, philanthropic, and NGO backgrounds to dive into some of the most pressing issues in peacebuilding, including the role of domestic and international peacebuilding institutions, the challenges and opportunities that elections pose to peace and security, and ways forward for peacebuilding in post-conflict settings. In addition, conference presenters shared best practices for engaging with policymakers, tools for utilizing media to maximize the impact of their work, and discussions around the future of U.S.-Africa relations under the current U.S. Administration. Members shared their achievements and challenges from the past year as well as their goals for the future of the network. Some key future objectives established during the conference are to bolster the SVNP scholar alumni network and to strengthen intra-network lines of communication.

The conference was a resounding success, and we look forward to the continued collaboration and growing impact of the SVNP. We have laid the groundwork for next year’s conference by collecting potential themes and soliciting volunteers to co-host. We will evaluate both in hopes of planning a conference in 2018 that will build on the great momentum and ideas shared in 2017. We continue to push for member engagement in network activities, foster opportunities for collaboration, and establish SVNP as a truly pan-African network by expanding our geographic reach. I thank each SVNP member organization for its cutting edge research on peacebuilding and its commitment to collaboration across the network. I also thank the Carnegie Corporation of New York, whose generous support has bolstered the network since its establishment six years ago.

Review of Conference Goals, Action Items, and Closing Ceremony
Welcome and Conference Objectives

Speakers:

• Dr. Monde Muyangwa, Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars

Dr. Muyangwa welcomed the participants and provided an overview of the Wilson Center, the Africa Program, and the SVNP. She reaffirmed the value of the SVNP, noting that it continues to evolve with new members and opportunities. The SVNP aims to address the deficit of African perspectives in U.S. policymaking and to diversify and amplify African voices on peacebuilding to both U.S. and African policymakers. The SVNP also seeks to strengthen the capacity of its member organizations and scholars through annual conferences, the scholarship program, and by forging North-South and South-South connections. The objectives of this year’s conference were to share lessons learned and best practices on what works in peacebuilding in Africa and to chart a way forward for strengthening the network.

Dr. Muyangwa shared an update on SVNP grant deliverables. She opened the discussion on what had been accomplished so far and on charting the way forward. Dr. Muyangwa emphasized that the network could do more and even exceed expected deliverables and impact, and she asked each member to brainstorm key priorities for peacebuilding in Africa from their perspectives. She noted that through sharing tips and best practices, SVNP members can extend their impact and translate their work into substantive policy change.

The anticipated outcomes of the 2017 annual conference were to deepen and broaden network connections, share knowledge, energize and renew member commitment to the network, and establish concrete measures for how to work together to strengthen the network. Dr. Muyangwa then provided an overview of the conference content, organization, and structure, which was organized around achieving these objectives.

As part of the conference objectives, Ms. Andrea Johnson of the Carnegie Corporation of New York asked participants to consider the link between peacebuilding and higher education, the inherent stability required for robust higher education, and the need to promote both issues concurrently.

SVNP Member Organization Introductions and Updates

Moderator:

• Dr. Monde Muyangwa, Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars

This session allowed the SVNP representatives to get to know each other and to understand each member organization’s mission. Each SVNP representative shared a brief update on his or her organization, its mission, and its work. Dr. Muyangwa noted the wealth and range of knowledge around the table, posing the question of how to best tap into this expertise to increase SVNP impact in the peacebuilding realm.

This session also sought to provide status updates on grant deliverables, including collaboration among member organizations. SVNP member organizations shared their collaborations in the past year, including on journal articles, country reports, and research studies. One of the major findings of this session was that some members (specifically, Dr. Fredrick Ogenga and Fr. Alain Nzadi-a-Nzadi collaborated on the journal Congo-Afrique; Dr. Edward Brown and Prof. Francois Masabo on data collection for a study; and Dr. Edward Brown and Ms. Eugenia Kayitesi on a country report for Rwanda) had taken measures to actively collaborate on various peacebuilding issues since the 2016 annual conference, thus helping to drive a major goal of the SVNP South-South collaboration on peacebuilding issues. Yet, most of the SVNP members were unaware of this collaboration. Dr. Brown noted that his organization, the African Center for Economic Transformation, is looking to collaborate with another research organization on a new project about financial inclusion of women and youth; potential case study countries include Guinea, Sierra Leone, and Zambia. Members noted that there could be better communication of these collaborative projects in order to share pride in the work that the network accomplishes together. To this end, Dr. Muyangwa asked that all SVNP members communicate collaborative projects in writing with the larger group. This update-sharing would be helpful going forward as members seek natural partners for future collaboration around peacebuilding. With regard to other deliverables, Dr. Muyangwa noted that the group was lagging in its contributions to the blog requirements. It was also noted that as beneficial as the SVNP scholarship is, only a handful of organizations were taking full advantage of it.

To set the stage for the final day’s discussion on the way forward for enhancing the network, Ms. Andrea Johnson suggested that it might be important to first have members share some of the key impediments to more active network participation and collaboration. Among the key impediments highlighted by members were: a weak alignment of organizational mission and the revamped peacebuilding focus of the SVNP; lack of common focus and interests among member organizations; limited financial resources; and poor communication and knowledge of what each member organization is working on in the peacebuilding space. The moderator urged members to take advantage of areas of existing alignment of expertise on peacebuilding and to embrace the broader and more encompassing definition of peacebuilding, their common commitment to peace and security issues in Africa, and the group’s ability to provide African perspectives on these critical issues. By first identifying the desired impact, members can collaborate to achieve the full potential of the network and capitalize on the demand for African perspectives on peacebuilding.

It was also noted that while progress has been made in terms of building North-South collaboration, there is still much to be done in bolstering South-South ties. Dr. Muyangwa’s recommendations included renewed efforts to engage with African policymakers, establishing clear intra-network communication strategies, and sharing each other’s work with wider individual and organizational networks.

Overview of Key Issues in Peacebuilding
Moderator:

- Professor Narnia Bohler-Muller, Human Sciences Research Council (HSRC)

This discussion was devoted to identifying the most important and pressing issues in peacebuilding from an African perspective. To facilitate the efficient sharing of key and pressing issues in peacebuilding, Dr. Bohler-Muller requested that each participant share three hashtags representing their top priorities for the peacebuilding agenda, in order of importance. Common threads in this discussion included issues on governance, institutions, youth, and inclusivity. Dr. Jok commented that inclusivity is not only about the goal of equality in the abstract; rather, it makes economic and political sense to include women and other traditionally marginalized groups in policy discussions.

Dr. Bohler-Muller noted that no one mentioned the Sustainable Development Goals or the AU Agenda 2063 during this exercise. This prompted a discussion about the role of international organizations in peacebuilding. Representatives noted the challenges in AU and UN coordination in peacebuilding, especially having to do with structure and bureaucracy and the respective political agenda of member states. Key questions posed during this discussion included whether the AU needs reform or complete transformation; how to determine what the AU is meant to be and what it is meant to accomplish; and whether the shortcomings of the AU are due to organizational issues or to the internal problems of its member states. Critical evaluation of the AU is necessary because, as the international community disengages, it will become even more necessary to sustain an African organization that is effective and impactful.

This session highlighted African concerns and priorities around the future of peacebuilding efforts as well as visibilities and gaps in the peacebuilding agenda in Africa.

Communicating Effectively with Policymakers

Speakers:

- Dr. Nancy Walker, Former Director, The Atlantic Council’s Ansari Africa Center, and Former Director, Africa Center for Strategic Studies

Dr. Walker led this session on how to best communicate with policymakers to achieve the greatest impact. She covered the importance of conducting, packaging, and communicating your research in ways that garner the attention of policymakers and are designed to achieve your desired objectives. Researchers, she emphasized, must put their work in the context of what a policymaker needs for decision-making. She noted the difficulty of capturing policymaker attention and emphasized the following elements for communicating effectively:

1. Understand your audience and how it digests and uses information
2. Keep your information brief, use active voice, and simplify your sentences (in contrast to the style of lengthy academic papers and presentations)
3. Provide background to the issue and options for action
4. Utilize charts and tables to visual clarity and to help you tell a compelling story
5. Present your information in a timely manner, linking your presentation to what is relevant to the policymaker at that particular time
6. Set and implement well-run meetings that have an agenda, stay on schedule, set objectives, and hold participants accountable for assigned tasks
7. Bring a one-pager that contains your key points in a concise, visually-accessible manner
These suggestions will help to deliver your message with maximum impact in minimum time.

Peacebuilding Architectures and Institutions – What Works?

Speakers:

- Mr. Gustavo de Carvalho, Senior Researcher, Peace and Operations Division, Institute for Security Studies (ISS)
- Dr. Ibrahim Wani, Independent Consultant and former Chief of the Africa Branch in the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in Geneva
- Professor Narnia Bohler-Muller, Executive Director, Democracy, Governance and Service Delivery Research Programme, Human Sciences Research Council (HSRC)

Moderator:

- Dr. Monde Muyangwa, Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars

In this session, panelists examined the effectiveness of Africa’s peacebuilding architectures and institutions, offered recommendations for increasing the efficacy of current approaches, and explored how Africa’s peacebuilding architectures operate within a global context.

Mr. Gustavo de Carvalho discussed the African Union’s (AU) emerging role as a leader in peace and security issues in Africa, highlighting the AU’s increased leadership in peacebuilding, its current engagement in self-reflection on its role, and its ongoing reform process aimed at streamlining and improving responses to conflict. He also noted that while there is consensus that conflict is expensive and that prevention is morally right, smart, and economically sound, prevention is highly underrepresented in peacebuilding and it remains difficult to persuade stakeholders to take action.

Another challenge highlighted by Mr. de Carvalho is the dominant mindset that peacebuilding is a linear process wherein peacekeeping and peacemaking neatly follow one another. In reality, he argued, post-conflict peacebuilding processes occur simultaneously and are non-linear. He also noted the disparity in funding for peacebuilding versus conflict response in the AU and UN budgets as an area of weakness. With regional and global resources skewed heavily towards peacekeeping, peacebuilding is grossly underfunded. Mr. de Carvalho offered several recommendations for increasing the effectiveness of architectures, including identifying the benchmarks of success more concretely, assessing the sequencing and timing of interventions for better implementation and reach, and the need for states to do more to empower the AU and UN in order to extend their reach and effectiveness on peacebuilding in Africa.

Dr. Ibrahim Wani analyzed human rights in the context of peacebuilding in Africa, focusing on the progress made towards preventing human rights violations, the key challenges and lessons learned, and possible ways forward. Dr. Wani noted that human rights are central to effective peacekeeping. In this regard, he applauded the successful inclusion of normative frameworks and human rights policies in existing UN peacekeeping missions.

To this end, he highlighted, among others, the adoption since 2000 of normative frameworks that include the protection of civilians, the responsibility to protect, and the AU’s Constitutive Act. Dr. Wani suggested that this trend reflects the growing awareness of the importance of human rights, which was in large part sparked by the Rwandan Genocide and Srebrenica.

Dr. Wani stated that despite the international community’s resolution to address human rights issues, serious action is rarely taken to address human rights violations and crimes. This is due to several factors: the crowded agenda of peacekeeping missions, which means that they are constantly facing capacity challenges including the lack of convergence around the definition of human rights; the lack of tools available to concretely address the violations (reports about violations are written but there is little if any concrete action taken); and the African Peace and Security Architecture’s failure to fully embrace the issue of human rights.

Dr. Wani offered recommendations for enhancing peacebuilding architectures, including: 1) continuing to strengthen mindsets regarding the critical role of human rights in peacebuilding and developing a coherent definition of human rights, focused on the local, regional, and global levels; 2) advancing and understanding human rights issues and developing additional tools to ensure effective action and accountability that go beyond condemnation and actually address human rights violations within Africa’s peacebuilding architectures.

Professor Narnia Bohler-Muller focused on role of the International Criminal Court (ICC) in African peacebuilding architectures. She particularly looked at the issues of human rights versus political expediency as well as the false dichotomy between peace and justice. She argued the importance of setting the precedent of punishing impunity, even if it means arresting heads of state, as rule of law is key to peacebuilding in the long-term, noting that there has been a struggle to domesticate ICC laws in Africa. Professor Bohler-Muller asserted that African countries must make a concerted effort to bolster rule of law domestically and strengthen African judiciaries to deal with challenging human rights cases.

Professor Bohler-Muller used the case of Sudanese President Omar al-Bashir’s visit to South Africa in 2015 to illustrate these judicial issues. South Africa’s failure to arrest al-Bashir was inconsistent with the Rome Statute and with South Africa’s obligation as an ICC Member State. South Africa argued that it could not arrest a head of state while maintaining its peacekeeping role on the continent. Professor Bohler-Muller argued, however, that protecting heads of state will not end conflict on the continent; rather, it will promote a culture of impunity that could escalate conflict in some areas. Rule of law counters the arbitrary exercise of power and is vital to the peacebuilding process. By upholding rule of law and, in particular, strengthening its domestic judiciary, South Africa, and other African states, can bolster human rights, peace, and justice. Professor Bohler-Muller recommended that African members of the ICC and signatories to the Rome Statute should comply with international rule of law and create permanent regional criminal courts. Lastly, South Africa should not withdraw from the Rome Statute, as this would damage its human rights reputation on the continent. If we continue to allow political expediency to trump human rights, she argued, we cannot carry out our peacebuilding agenda.

Elections and Peacebuilding – Key Issues, Challenges, Lessons Learned, and Best Practices

Speakers:
- Ms. Elizabeth Lewis, Deputy Director, Africa Division, International Republican Institute (IRI)
- Dr. Ibrahim Diarra, Director, Centre Ivorien de Recherches Economiques et Sociales (Cires)
- Fr. Alain Nzadi-a-Nzadi, Director, Centre d’Etudes Pour L’Action Sociale (CEPAS)

Moderator:
- Dr. Monde Muyangwa, Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars

The objective of this session was to examine the role of elections in peacebuilding. Panelists drew on broader international perspectives as well as lessons learned from Côte d’Ivoire and the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC).

Starting with the broader international perspective, Ms. Elizabeth Lewis provided an overview of the role of elections in peacebuilding in Africa, addressing the progress made and identifying remaining challenges. Acknowledging that elections are more complex in conflict situations, Ms. Lewis stressed the importance of viewing elections as part of the larger peacebuilding process rather than as an end in themselves. Moreover, she suggested that in order to be successful, post-conflict elections should be held after broad-based, inclusive political dialogues focused on strengthening internal democratic institutions and building legal and constitutional frameworks. While elections mark pivotal steps in democratic transitions, according to Ms. Lewis, they should not be held without proper preparations; free and fair elections must seek to utilize adequate voter technology, ensure that all citizens are educated on their choices and rights as well as the process, and also consider electoral logistics. She cited examples from the Central African Republic and Kenya, where the uses of popular dialogue and legal and constitutional reforms respectively have seen success in the broader peacebuilding process. Ms. Lewis then offered key recommendations for elections and peacebuilding, stating that African regional institutions and the media should embrace the roles they can play in fostering space for democratic elections, and that all stakeholders must refrain from focusing on elections at the expense of the overall peacebuilding process. She noted that elections should not be held until management bodies have the capacity to ensure credible processes, and that civil society organizations must continue to bring the electoral processes to citizens in order to ensure that elections are not an elite-driven process.

Dr. Ibrahim Diarra discussed the experience, key issues, and lessons learned from elections in Côte d’Ivoire. Dr. Diarra noted that the transition to a multi-party system in 1990 also marked the advent of electoral violence in Côte d’Ivoire, and that this has been an issue since. In fact, he noted that violence has come to characterize the entire process—before, during, and after elections. He suggested that in order to mitigate violence during the electoral process, Côte d’Ivoire should augment civic education; address the issue of illiteracy, both generally, and in relation to understanding electoral laws; and work to minimize the alignment between and among clan, ethnic, and religious identification in elections. Dr. Diarra noted how the high levels of frustration among the youth, the ambiguous electoral texts used by politicians for their own means, and the ongoing land and ethnic conflicts in the country contributed to this violence. Conversely, he highlighted how the first televised presidential debates increased public inclusion in the elections and suggested that continuation of televised debates could be a tool for reducing violence. Further, he suggested that presidential candidates should sign a charter committing to peaceful elections and respecting the election results. To resolve electoral issues in Côte d’Ivoire, Dr. Diarra recommended increasing public access to and understanding of electoral legislation (particularly through radio, TV, and public sessions), including all stakeholder groups in the electoral process, and employing indigenous mechanisms for conflict resolution to reduce violence before, during, and after elections. He suggested that international partners could play a role by being more supportive of these efforts.

Fr. Alain Nzadi-a-Nzadi shared his assessment, key issues, and lessons learned from the DRC’s experience with elections. He framed his remarks around the DRC’s geopolitical location in Central Africa, the state of democracy within the surrounding countries and the DRC itself, and the impact on peace and stability in the region, particularly given the region’s lack of democratic models. Fr. Nzadi-a-Nzadi argued that the DRC needs to be stable in order for the Central African region to be stable. He provided a historical overview of elections in the DRC, noting the voting patterns that tend to be divided along regional and ethnic lines, which, in turn, has negatively impacted the nation-building exercises.
He compared the 2006 and 2011 elections in the DRC, focusing on the legislative changes that occurred before the elections in 2011 that allowed President Kabila to remain in power. He also suggested that the stipulations of the December 2016 agreement have not yet been met and may delay the elections slated for late 2017. To solve the electoral issues in the DRC, Fr. Nzadi-a-Nzadi recommended that the DRC hold democratic, regular, free, and fair elections that give room to political alternation, that countries in the region seek cross-country solutions to ensure stability, that leaders develop a mindset that there is a 'life after the presidency,' and that the external policymakers and stakeholders consider strong sanctions against government officials who do not respect the integrity of elections and their broader role in the peacebuilding process.

Peacebuilding in Africa – Stakeholders Dialogue

[Held under a non-attribution policy]

During this roundtable, participants heard three stakeholder perspectives on peacebuilding in Africa—from a philanthropic organization, U.S. Government organization, and U.S.-based NGO. The session allowed SVNP members to engage with various stakeholders about their mission, objectives, priorities, perspectives, challenges, and recommendations for more effective engagement and collaboration in the peacebuilding space.

One stakeholder spoke about investing in countries and areas that have made demonstrable progress and have had success implementing programs in the past. They discussed how the impact of investment is measured through indicators of “positive peace,” which reflect the level of citizens’ comfort carrying out daily tasks without fear of violence. They also spoke about including youth in peacebuilding research, as they are often forward-thinking and bring fresh perspectives. The stakeholder addressed the need to respect African agency, and noted an increased recognition that Africans need to lead the peacebuilding process. There are both adaptive and technical challenges in the peacebuilding space; adaptive challenges require a different kind of thinking, whereas technical challenges can be addressed through innovations.

A second speaker addressed the issue of why and how the U.S. Government engages with peacebuilding in Africa. U.S. commitment to Africa is evident in its status as the largest humanitarian donor. In the U.S., there is bi-partisan support for Africa, including for programs like the U.S. President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) and for combatting violent extremism in Africa. U.S. Government priorities in peacebuilding include counterterrorism, security, and the prevention of genocide and other crimes. The speaker also highlighted challenges from the U.S. Government perspective, including the lack of democratic transitions of power on the continent, the situation in the Central African Republic (CAR), and ongoing engagement in Somalia. From the U.S. Government perspective, indicators of success in peacebuilding include the departure of UN peacekeeping missions, decreased refugee and internally displaced person flows, successful African-led elections, development of local conflict mitigation instruments, and reintegration of former combatants.

The NGO speaker highlighted the difficulty of peacebuilding in fragile states due to a coalition of factors and variables that stymie progress. In the CAR, for example, factors causing the ongoing conflict include the manipulation of ethnicity, unhealed historical wounds, the weakness of the state, and the sense of voicelessness among segments of the society. This type of violence causes deep wounds in the population, which makes the society more susceptible to further conflict. This speaker offered key lessons learned and recommendations, including that peacebuilding cannot be successful if it focuses only on the state; that working with civil local civil society is key; and that more effort should go towards turning adversaries into partners and collaborators. She reinforced the idea that peacebuilding is not linear. In many African contexts, state-building and peacebuilding go hand-in-hand. Those working in this space must understand and account for the norms and culture of the impacted local communities, otherwise peacebuilding will not work.
International partners can support meaningful peacebuilding in Africa by revisiting the investments that they make in peacebuilding, focusing the long-term return on these investments, and by helping to ensure that global peace infrastructures are grounded in legislation that is not ad hoc.

Dr. Muyangwa offered key takeaways from the discussion, including the necessity of understanding how various stakeholders are engaging with peacebuilding, seeing peacebuilding as a long-term and non-linear process, taking into account the importance of trust and collaboration, and engaging with local communities and groups outside of capital cities. Key issues to address in the peacebuilding process from the broader U.S. perspective include state fragility, transnational threats, violent extremism, and supporting African leadership. Peacebuilding has many stakeholders and the work belongs to all of us.

Media Training for Effective Communication

Facilitator:

- Mr. John Milewski, Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars

This workshop aimed to review techniques and best practices for engaging with the media. The session focused on style and strategy, including for audio and video interviews. The main takeaways were to utilize storytelling and a conversational tone to most effectively connect and communicate with audiences. It is best to reduce complexity, convey your enthusiasm for the topic, actively engage with the audience and interviewer, and lead with your most compelling concepts. Research shows that audiences are most likely to remember “sticky ideas,” ones that are simple, unexpected, concrete, credible, emotional, and in a story format.

Post-Conflict Peacebuilding – Key Issues, Challenges, Lessons Learned, and Best Practices

Speakers:

- Dr. Kidane Kiros Bitsue, Director, Institute for Peace and Security Studies (IPSS)
- Dr. Edward Brown, Director, Policy Advisory Service, African Center for Economic Transformation (ACET)
- Ambassador (Ret.) Phillip Carter III, Executive Vice President, Jefferson Waterman International, and former U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Côte d'Ivoire and Guinea
- Professor Francois Masabo, Acting Director, Center for Conflict Management (CCM), National University of Rwanda
- Ms. Elizabeth Murray, Senior Program Officer, Middle East & Africa, United States Institute of Peace (USIP)

Moderator:
Together the panelists examined post-conflict peacebuilding from several angles, including the successes and challenges of the African Union’s framework, the economic development dimensions of peacebuilding, international engagement in interventions, the use of indigenous approaches and mechanisms, and the role of national dialogues.

Dr. Kidane Kiros Bitsue opened by discussing the African Union’s (AU) post-conflict peacebuilding and reconstruction framework, including its contents, rationale, and challenges of implementation. According to Dr. Bitsue, post-conflict peacebuilding is a priority area for the AU and a key component of Agenda 2063, which reflects the desire for peace and stability across the continent. Although violent conflicts have generally decreased in frequency on the continent, relapses of violence continue to occur. Violence is exacerbated by national security issues affecting the continent as a whole, and it is therefore imperative that planning and implementation occurs on the continent level. The AU Commission has been actively involved in post-conflict reconstruction since its establishment over 15 years ago. The AU peacebuilding policy, which Dr. Bitsue applauds as comprehensive and inclusive, was established to combat issues of identity, national security, and relapses of violence. While the policy includes measures to address security, political governance, human rights and justice, and women and gender, the implementation of these policies has continued to lapse. Dr. Bitsue asserted that structural transformation is necessary to operationalize and implement the AU peacebuilding agenda as is an increased focus on capacity-building of member states.

Dr. Edward Brown addressed the role of public financing and domestic resource mobilization in conflict resolution and development. Too often, the economic dimension is neglected in post-conflict settings. In addition, international aid architectures are evolving, official development assistance is declining, and a number of new actors are emerging, including China. There is also an increasing prominence of bonds, especially European bonds, in African economies. Due to these shifts, African countries in general, and post-conflict countries in particular, may struggle to develop strong institutions and fund successful peacebuilding processes. Given the evolving international financial landscape, Dr. Brown argued that post-conflict states must increase domestic resource mobilization, enhance tax-system literacy, expand potential tax yields, and close revenue loss gaps by addressing tax exemptions and corruption. Moreover, Dr. Brown suggested that new tax systems should include broad-based taxes to facilitate local revenue generation. While Dr. Brown notes that domestic resource mobilization is weak in many states, it is essential for a viable African state. Resource mobilization issues can be solved through the commitment of leaders, support for capacity-building, and the development of more effective domestic tax systems in states undergoing post-conflict peacebuilding.

Ambassador (Ret.) Phillip Carter III discussed international engagement in post-conflict situations, acknowledging that many international interventions in Africa attempt to stop ongoing violence but fail to address the root causes of conflict. He noted that U.S. government interventions could be more robust and better account for post-conflict planning. Because most international partners tend to think of peacebuilding along bilateral lines, they fail to address the transnational nature of most conflicts. Ambassador Carter stated that repairing the trust deficit is the biggest challenge for post-conflict peacebuilding and requires buy-in from both international actors and local communities. As it stands, the economic dimension of peacebuilding tends to reward the winners and ignore the losers in a conflict, which further alienates those who have already lost out. Security sector reform is not working as well as it could, and it needs to be revisited as well. He recommends that international actors learn what is happening on the ground, identify the local actors, and stress economic reconstruction of communities at the local level. Ambassador Carter’s presentation made a clear call for addressing the root causes of conflicts by going beyond national capitals and establishing inclusive healing strategies for post-conflict peacebuilding in Africa.
Professor Francois Masabo focused on indigenous approaches to post-conflict peacebuilding using lessons learned from Rwanda. Outlining the context of post-genocide Rwanda, Professor Masabo discussed the conflict’s total destruction of societal norms and offered examples of efforts to rebuild social cohesion within the country. One such example was that of a state-led program, “One Cow per Family,” to provide all households with a cow, which have intrinsic value in Rwanda and indicate a blessed household, to ensure that all citizens feel valued and included. Professor Masabo argued that peacebuilding programs must be state-centered and must tackle both macro- and micro-level issues, and be holistic in nature, encompassing many issues simultaneously. Moreover, Professor Masabo recommended that post-conflict states have a fundamental, comprehensive, and people-centered framework in place to use as a guide before attempting to reconstruct after a conflict in order to address the challenges of building institutional capacity, stabilizing the country, and ensuring inclusivity in post-conflict peacebuilding.

Ms. Elizabeth Murray addressed the important role that national dialogues can play in the peacebuilding process. According to Ms. Murray, the largest impediments to post-conflict peacebuilding are the lack of clarity about the resources needed to implement peace agreements, the lack of meaningful security sector reform, and the lack of inclusivity in implementation. Ms. Murray suggested that national dialogues can be used as a tool to combat these challenges as they provide the opportunity for traditionally marginalized groups to join the process. Inclusive participation in national dialogues increases pressure on governments to implement peace agreements and to establish concrete frameworks for country-wide ownership of the peacebuilding process. Ms. Murray offered recommendations for the international community, arguing that stakeholders must proceed with caution in facilitating national dialogues, take a critical look at the intentions of the elite in embarking on national dialogues, take a critical look at the intentions of the elite in embarking on national dialogues, and empower traditionally excluded groups in order to be successful in post-conflict peacebuilding in Africa.

U.S.-Africa Policy under the Trump Administration

[Held under a non-attribution policy]

During this internal session, conference participants had the opportunity to engage with perspectives on the prospects for U.S.-Africa relations during the Trump Administration. It was noted that it is difficult to tell exactly what U.S.-Africa policy might look like under the Trump Administration, as there have been very few leadership statements about Africa and the Africa leadership team was still under construction. The best that can be done at this point is to extrapolate some likely themes and outcomes based on the campaign and the Administration’s statements on key issues.

The Administration will likely place a focus on defense and national security, international trade, shifting federal budget allocations, democracy and human rights, and immigration from Africa. With regard to security, the Trump Administration has made it clear that it will focus on annihilating ISIL and its franchises as a matter of priority. In this context, Somalia, the Lake Chad Basin, and the North and Middle Sahel are likely to receive a lot of attention. While this does not necessarily mean that President Trump will commit more troops to combatting violent extremism on the continent, there has been an increase in the use of drones.

On international trade, President Trump's position is that most trade agreements are unfair to the United States. As such, the Administration is likely to re-evaluate all trade deals, including the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA), the signature trade agreement in Africa. For this Administration, a key question is “What is in it for the United States?” In seeking to answer that question, African governments should consider offering reciprocity and highlight the benefits that the U.S. derives from AGOA.

The Trump Administration has sent clear signals through its proposed budget that it intends to reallocate resources and shift priorities. From the draft budget, it appears that the Administration will shift funding away from the Department of State and USAID and towards the Department of Defense. While reduced funding for development assistance should be of concern to some African countries, there is also room for optimism, including the fact that many key programs instituted by Presidents Bush and Obama enjoy bipartisan support in Congress.

So far, the Trump Administration has not significantly altered previous administrations’ stance of promoting democracy and human rights on the continent. The U.S. has continued to put pressure on African states to advance democracy; President Trump recently signed new sanctions against the Kabila Government in the DRC because of human rights abuses. As time goes on, however, the President might be less interested in these concerns and more interested in counterterrorism in Africa.

Immigration is a large concern for the Administration. Africa was an area of focus at the most recent G20 meeting, and African illegal migration was an agenda item, particularly as it affects Europe. It is possible that the Trump Administration will back European efforts to create more jobs in Africa in order to reduce immigration to Europe due to his preference for private-sector solutions.

An SVNP representative asked about the extent to which Trump’s comments regarding Africa are consistent with the views of the rest of the Administration and to what extent they will influence Congress. Although much depends on the actions and views of the new Assistant Secretary for Africa, there is hope that Congress will push for U.S. engagement and democracy and human rights even when the President does not, especially in cases like the DRC. Congress is particularly strong on the DRC, as there is a large and vocal diaspora community from the DRC in the U.S. It is also likely that the U.S. will follow Europe's lead on this issue, as European states are generally more acquainted with the DRC.

Another SVNP representative asked about the future of U.S. support for peacekeeping operations in Africa. President Obama placed an emphasis on this issue, but UN Ambassador Nikki Haley seems to be heading in a different direction, announcing cuts to peacekeeping. The French have borne the burden of the fight against extremism in the Sahel. Many stakeholders are trying to convince the U.S. that continued support for peacekeeping is a good bargain, as it helps maintain stability and prevent future conflicts. While it is likely that the U.S. will cut the amount of its budget going toward the UN, cutting funding for peacekeeping missions will mean that the U.S. will have to engage to an even greater degree, and devote even more resources to addressing conflicts and violent extremism down the line.
Sessions on the Southern Voices Network for Peacebuilding

Charting the Way Forward for the SVNP Scholarship Program

Moderator:

- Rev. Eugène Gousskindey, Centre de Recherche et d’Action pour la Paix (CERAP)

In this session, SVNP members discussed the benefits of the SVNP scholarship to individual scholars and member organizations, identified key challenges that hinder the active participation of organizations in the scholarship program, and suggested ways to encourage more organizations to participate and to strengthen the scholarship program. The session included a roundtable during which former SVNP scholars shared the benefits and challenges they experienced and how the scholarship program contributed to their individual and organizational capacity. Dr. Frederick Ogenga described the scholarship as “life changing,” emphasizing how the publications, especially the policy brief and the research paper, had increased the visibility of his work and enhanced his grassroots efforts in his home country. He noted that the scholarship provided powerful networking opportunities that opened up regional and international avenues for partnership. Dr. Ogenga said he also appreciated the scholarship for helping him to analyze issues pragmatically and to better understand policymaker perspectives. The Wilson Center can help member organizations with the drafting and distribution of policy papers, which can be particularly beneficial for those members who may not be as familiar with policy and policy papers.

Dr. Lado Ludovic appreciated the staff support, the environment, and the research resources available in the Washington area and provided by the scholarship. For him, the main benefits were taking time away from work to reflect, learning about drafting policy briefs and the policy brief culture, and accessing U.S. policy perspectives around his topic of religious violence in Africa. He noted that the learning curve associated with policy writing and interacting with policymakers presented a challenge, as did being away from home and family for an extended period of time.

Dr. Fritz Nganje was one of the very first SVNP scholars. He noted that the scholarship was an opportunity for him to grow professionally and that it opened a lot of doors for him. His experience at the Wilson Center allowed him to learn how Washington works and to interact and exchange views with scholars from all over the world. His one recommendation was for the Wilson Center to do more to better prepare the scholars before they arrive. Now, the Wilson Center sends a pre-arrival information packet to all scholars. The Wilson Center Africa Program committed to sending this packet to all directors for review to help determine if any additions should be made to help scholars better prepare for the program.
Dr. Getachew Gebrekidan shared that the scholarship benefitted his career progression, developed his policy writing skills, and provided him with media training that enabled him to more effectively engage with the media when he returned home. The scholarship also provided an opportunity to engage with other scholars, policymakers, and analysts. In fact, he was able to meet with over 40 policymakers and organizations across Washington during his tenure. Since he returned to his home country, he has continued to act as an ambassador for SVNP by contributing to the Africa Year in Review publication, producing blog posts, and publishing in peer-reviewed journals. Dr. Gebrekidan has become a sought-after advisor on the situation in South Sudan, which was his research focus while at the Wilson Center. The biggest challenge that he faced during his scholarship was the weather. He recommended that the SVNP work to strengthen the benefits of the scholarship through stronger links between the Wilson Center, the SVNP scholar, and the SVNP sending organization.

Overall, the scholarship program offers many opportunities for growing your network, amplifying your voice, and building the capacity of SVNP network organizations. Work remains to be done in streamlining the scholarship process and better capturing and communicating the scholarship benefits to SVNP member organizations. Some organizations expressed that capacity constraints prevent them from sending members for the three-month scholarship term. Retention of staff is also a key challenge for member organizations. Yet, organizations who have sent a scholar experienced institutional benefits from the experience.

Strengthening the SVNP, Measuring Impact, and the Way Forward

The final internal session included a roundtable discussion of a set of questions posed by Dr. Muyangwa, which were used to gauge the key areas in which the SVNP network is succeeding and areas for potential improvement. Common responses for areas of best impact included the opportunities for networking, knowledge-sharing, and interacting with policymakers. Impediments to the SVNP network achieving its goals include the lack of resources, organizational commitment, capacity, and clear lines of communication. The perceived mismatch in organizational and individual focus areas acts as a barrier to collaboration as can funding constraints. Members expressed a desire to learn about fundraising in the African context so that their organizations can assure their long-term sustainability; this is a potential area for training during the next annual conference. Dr. Muyangwa will try to facilitate policymaker connections on the higher level, and these connections can help members gain access to further contacts that can help expand the network’s reach.

If the Carnegie Corporation were to offer a continuation of the grant at a steady-state level, participants offered ideas for what they would remove in favor of other activities. Adding exchange components and more engagement with African policymakers were offered as additions, and virtual or shorter conferences were offered as potential areas for reduction. The last question was if the budget were increased for the program, what could be expanded or added? All agreed that we should attempt to include more African policymakers in our activities and conferences. Another idea was strengthening the SVNP scholar alumni network.

Turning to the 2018 Annual Conference, members offered ideas for the theme. More than 36 topics were suggested, of which the top five were:

1. Youth and Peacebuilding in Africa
2. National, Regional, and Global Infrastructures for Peace in Africa
3. Migration and Peacebuilding
4. Resourcing and Sustaining Peace in Africa
5. Education and Peace in Africa
SVNP directors will vote on these topics to select the theme for the 2018 Conference.

To close, Dr. Muyangwa outlined the deliverables and action items for moving forward. Key conference deliverables include:

1. Conference photo packet, session summaries, presentations, and contact sheet
2. The timeline for future SVNP scholarships
3. The pre-arrival scholar information packet
4. The SVNP affiliation strategy
5. The 2017 SVNP Annual Conference Report
6. Dr. Walker’s one-pager for engaging with policymakers
7. Information on key organizations funding peacebuilding in Africa

The complete list of deliverables and action items can be found in the appendices.

Southern Voices Network for Peacebuilding Member Organization Representatives

Dr. Kidane Kiros Bitsue is currently the Director of the Institute for Peace and Security Studies (IPSS). He holds a PhD degree in Development Studies. Prior to joining IPSS, his career path was mostly related to teaching, research, and educational administration. From 2003 to 2014, he taught in various Addis Ababa University (AAU) faculties and served as acting Director of the Institute of Federal Studies as well as Senior Administrator and Finance Head for Continuing and Distance Education at the AAU. He also has experience working with humanitarian organizations including the Ethiopian Red Cross Society (as the Head of the Wollo Zone Branch Office); International Federation of Red Cross/Crescent (as member of the Eastern Africa Regional Working Group on Food Security (WGFS); and the Ethiopian Red Cross Society (as a member of the National Working Group on Food Security (WGFS).

Prof. Narnia Bohler-Muller holds the degrees of B. Juris LLB LLM (UPE) LLD (UP). Previously she was Professor of law at Vista University and Nelson Mandela Metropolitan University (NMMU) before joining Africa Institute of South Africa (AISA) as research director of social sciences in 2011. Currently she is Executive Director of the Democracy, Governance and Service Delivery research programme at the Human Sciences Research Council and an adjunct Professor of the Nelson R. Mandela School of Law at the University of Fort Hare. Prof. Bohler-Muller is an admitted Advocate of the High Court of the Republic of South Africa. She has also represented South Africa in multilateral fora such as BRICS (Brazil, Russia, India, China, South Africa) and is leading the Blue Economy Core Group of IORA (Indian Ocean Rim Association) appointed by the Minister of Higher Education and the Minister of International Relations respectively.

Dr. Edward K. Brown is the Director, Country Engagements and Operations at the African Center for Economic Transformation (ACET), based in Accra, Ghana. He has more than 35 years’ experience in international development and public policy, half of which were spent at the World Bank. He has worked extensively in Africa, Eastern Europe, and Central Asia. Currently at ACET, he manages a pool of in-house senior policy advisors, researchers and economist, drawing on a worldwide pool of expertise to assist African policymakers in responding to specific challenges and opportunities—with the explicit goals of transferring knowledge, building local capabilities and spurring economic growth and transformation. He holds a PhD and MA in Development Economics and Demography from the University of Pennsylvania. Language Skills: English, French

Mr. Gustavo de Carvalho is a Senior Researcher in the Peace Operations and Peacebuilding Division at the Institute for Security Studies (ISS). Gustavo has extensive experience in capacity development, policy support and research initiatives in the conflict prevention, peace operations and peacebuilding fields in Africa. Gustavo holds a bachelor degree in international relations from the University of Brasilia, and an MSc in African Studies from the University of Oxford.

Dr. Ibrahim Diarra is an economist and currently holds the position of Director of Centre Ivoirien de Recherches Economiques et Sociales (CIREES), as well as that of Lecturer and Researcher at the Economic Department of Université Félix Houphouët-Boigny. His research interests include microeconomics, agricultural policy, poverty and sustainable development, and peacebuilding analysis. Previously he was the Deputy Director of the Ivorian Agricultural Ministry. His current research deals with the dynamic of poverty in Côte d’Ivoire.
Mr. Chukwuemeka Eze is the Executive Director of the West Africa Network for Peacebuilding (WANEP); the largest peacebuilding network in Africa with offices in the 15 ECOWAS states. Eze is Senior Adviser to the United Nations Special Representative to Guinea-Bissau on Mediation and has 20 years of experience in conflict transformation and intelligence analysis. He designed the early warning system of South Sudan and the lead interface for CSOs in the operationalization of the ECOWAS early warning system. Eze recently concluded his PhD thesis on Conflict Early Warning and holds a Master’s degree in Peace and Conflict Studies. He is a Fellow of Institute for Chartered Mediators and Conciliators and Society for Peace Studies & Practice.

Rev. Eugène Goussikindey is currently the Director General of the Centre de Recherche et d’Action pour la Paix (CERAP). Prior to this, he taught philosophy in Kinshasa (DRC) and theology in Nairobi (Kenya) where he initiated the Hekima Institute of Peace Studies and International Relations. He has earned a M.A. in Philosophy from the University of Montréal-Canada and a Ph.D. in Theology from St Michael’s Toronto-Canada.

Dr. Ibrahim Hathie is the Research Director for the Initiative Prospective Agricole et Rurale (IPAR, Senegal). His research focuses mainly on agricultural performance, youth employment, climate change and the Post 2015 development agenda. From 2009 to 2011, he was a Value Chain Manager at the USAID Economic Growth Project in Senegal with a focus on a business approach to food security. He has also served as a Professor at the National School of Applied Economics (ENEA, Senegal) from 1992 to 2009 where he assumed the position of Director of Studies and Fieldwork from 2004 to 2007. Dr. Hathie holds a PhD in Agricultural & Resource Economics from the University of Connecticut, USA.

Dr. Jok Madut Jok is currently the Executive Director of the Sudd Institute, a public policy research center based in South Sudan. He was educated in Sudan, Egypt and the United States and holds a Ph.D. in Anthropology of Health from the University of California, Los Angeles in the United States (UCLA). He is also a Professor of Anthropology at the University of Juba in South Sudan. He is a widely recognized specialist on conflict and political violence. Following the independence of South Sudan in 2011, Jok served for two years in the newly formed Government of South Sudan as Undersecretary in the Ministry of Culture and Heritage. Jok has worked extensively in the aid and development sectors and is the author of four books and numerous articles covering gender, sexuality and reproductive health, humanitarian aid, ethnography of political violence, gender-based violence, war and slavery, and the politics of identity in South Sudan and Sudan. Over the years, Jok has held several fellowship positions, including at the United States Institute of Peace, the Rift Valley Institute, and the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars. His books include Breaking Sudan: The Search for Peace (2017), Sudan: Race, Religion and Violence (2007) and War and Slavery in Sudan (2001). Jok is also co-editor of The Sudan Handbook (2010) and is currently working on a manuscript on the impact of insecurity on social cohesion.

Ms. Helen Kezie-Nwoha is the Executive Director of Isis-Women’s International Cross Cultural Exchange (Isis-WICCE). With an academic background in gender and international development and over 16 years’ experience working on women’s rights, gender, peace building and conflict resolution and governance, she provides leadership in resource mobilization, institutional visioning and management. She has led regional and international training and research programs and advocacy on peace and security in Africa (Liberia, South Sudan, Uganda, Democratic Republic of Congo, Sierra Leone and Burundi) and Asia. She has provided technical support for peace mediation engagements by women activists in Burundi and Democratic Republic of Congo. Helen has a Master’s in Business Administration.

Mr. Francis A. Kornegay, Jr. is a Global Fellow of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars in Washington, D.C. along with Institute for Global Dialogue-UNISA affiliation. In 2014, he organized the first international symposium on the Indian Ocean-South Atlantic oceans governance and maritime security issues in relation to South and Southern African interests. He is the lead co-editor of Laying the BRICS of a New Global Order (2013, Africa Institute of SA) published in 2013. Kornegay served as a Professional Staffer on the Hill, drafting the last sanctions bill against apartheid South Africa, helped set up the Office of Research and Evaluation at the African Development Foundation, and headed up the South African office of the African-American Institute in Johannesburg. He has a B.A. in Political Science from the University of Michigan, M.A. in African Studies from Howard University, and a Master’s in International Public Policy from the School of Advanced International Studies.

Prof. Francois Masabo holds a Ph. D. in Social Sciences with a specialization in the Sociology of Change and Conflict. He is Director of the Centre for Conflict Management (CCM) at the University of Rwanda and Lecturer in two Master’s Programs run by CCM which are M.A. in Peace Studies and Conflict Transformation, and M.A. in Genocide Studies and Prevention. He conducted quite a number of research efforts which focused on the root causes of conflict and conflict resolution in Rwanda and in the region. His own research interests mainly pertain to conflict transformation processes, genocide memories and post-conflict reconstruction challenges.

Fr. Alain Nzadi-a-Nzadi is a Jesuit from the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). He was born in 1977. He joined the Society of Jesus in 1998. He holds a B.A. in Philosophy from St. Peter Canisius/Kinshasa, a M.A. in Francophone Literature from University of Lubumbashi (DRC), a B.A. in Theology from Hekima-University College (Nairobi/Kenya), and a M.A. in Biblical Theology from Centre Sèvres-Facultés Jésuites de Paris (France). He was ordained to the priesthood in 2013 in Kinshasa. In July 2014, he was appointed Deputy Editor of the Journal Congo-Afrique. Since September 2015 he has been the Editor in Chief of Congo-Afrique Journal and Managing Director of the Research Center For Social Action (CEPAS).

Dr. Franklin Oduro is the Head of Research and Programs and Deputy Director of the Ghana Center for Democratic Development (CDD), a governance research and policy advocacy think tank based in Ghana. African Center for Economic Transformation (ACET)

Country: Ghana

Director: K.Y. Amoako

Point of Contact: Edward K. Brown

Overview: ACET is an economic policy institute that supports Africa’s long-term growth. Its mission is to promote policy and institutional reforms for sustained economic growth and transformation in Africa. Its vision is for all African countries to drive their own growth and transformation agendas by 2025. This will be led by the private sector and supported by capable states with strong institutions and good policies.

Topical Focus: ACET utilizes three approaches to their work on sustained economic growth and transformation: analysis, advice, and advocacy. These methods are used in three primary areas:

1. African Transformation Index: provides a common quantitative tool to measure the progress of countries and foster intra-African learning
2. Shared Governance: assists in developing institutional arrangements for coordinated policy, management of public finances, and delivery of goals
3. Transformation Dialogues Program: shares the findings with stakeholders at the global, regional, and country levels for debate, feedback, refinement, and implementation

Operations: As a think tank, ACET applies knowledge by directly engaging citizens and decision makers. Bringing an authentic African perspective, the core staff comprises 30 personnel from eight African countries, based at the headquarters in Accra. They include economists, researchers, policy analysts, management consultants, extractive industries experts, and administrative staff. They are supported by a global network of dozens of resource persons and renowned experts in African development, including a Nobel laureate in economics.

African Institute for Development Policy (AFIDEP)

Country: Kenya

Director: Eliya Zulu

Point of Contact: Rose Oronje

Overview: AFIDEP is a non-profit policy think tank whose mission is to translate research evidence and use it to advocate for improved policies and program effectiveness in Africa. The ultimate goal is to contribute to the improvement of the wellbeing of Africans by reducing unplanned pregnancies, reducing maternal and child deaths, slowing population growth, and improving sexual and reproductive health outcomes of young people.

Topical Focus: AFIDEP’s 2014-2018 Strategic Plan provides a framework to guide the Institute in building on past gains as well as expanding and strengthening the scope of its programs. It follows three overarching objectives: the synthesis and translation of research evidence; enabling the utilization of research evidence in decision-making; and strengthening capacity in research evidence synthesis, translation, and utilization. It has three focus areas:
1. Population change and development
2. Maternal and child health
3. Adolescent reproductive health and development

Operations: AFIDEP has assembled a multi-disciplinary core staff comprising of experts trained in various social sciences, public health, policy analysis, and communications. This team will be expanded during the next five years in line with the changing needs of our programs. The Institute’s core staff is complemented by a network of Associate Fellows who contribute to our work and seek to strengthen the impact of their own work through our programs and connections. A Board of Directors comprising distinguished experts, who provide strategic guidance and oversee the running of the organization, governs AFIDEP.

African Technology Policy Studies Network (ATPS)

Country: Kenya

Director: Nicolas Ozor

Point of Contact: same

Overview: ATPS Network is a multidisciplinary network whose mission it is to improve the quality of science, technology, and innovation (STI) research, policy, and practice for sustainable development in Africa, by Africans, and for Africa. The strategic vision is to become the leading center of excellence and reference in STI systems research.

Topical Focus: ATPS draws on its rich network of experts in all aspects of the innovation systems in African countries including policymakers, science experts, private sector actors, and the civil society actors. It focuses specifically in the fields of science, technology, and innovation and works to further training and capacity building, communication and sensitization, knowledge brokerage, policy advocacy, and outreach in Africa. It will achieve its vision by strengthening capacity for knowledge generation, communication, and dissemination for sustainable development in Africa.

Operations: ATPS was established in 1994 and was accorded full diplomatic status in Kenya on December 3, 2003. ATPS operates through chapters in 29 countries across Africa and the Diaspora in Europe and the USA. It ensures that the STI policy research and programs are fully and effectively engaging all actors in the relevant innovation systems. Most importantly, it ensures that they are implemented at improved cost-effectiveness and low administration cost ratios.

Center for Policy Studies (CERPS)

Country: Liberia
Director: Byron Tarr
Point of Contact: same

Overview: CERPS is an independent policy research institution established to study issues critical to Liberia and West Africa. Unlike the rest of ECOWAS, Liberia has little capacity to carry out necessary policy research. CERPS seeks to fill that void by creating policymaking capacity within Liberia.

Topical Focus: CERPS seeks to spur peacebuilding and identify and resolve issues that inhibit nation-building and development. To do this, the Center identifies and researches possible policy choices on emerging debates across political, social, and economic issues, encourage dialogue, and find consensus. It also reaches out to build a bridge between the Liberian public and policymakers to ensure adequate local and national voices in policy debates and inform the public of important policymaking issues.

Operations: The founding members of CERPS have decades of research experience in policy fields including economics, law, political science, conflict resolution, natural resource management, peacebuilding, and land rights. Members of the team have experience working in government, academia, research organizations, and civil society, and are well-positioned to build bridges between them and enhancing policymaking capacity.

Initiative for Public Policy Analysis (IPPA)

Country: Nigeria

Director: Thompson Ayodele

Point of Contact: Olusegun Sotola

Overview: IPPA is a research and advocacy organization whose mission is to serve as one of the leading promoters of social, economic, and political freedom. IPPA holds tenaciously the belief in free society hinged on the principle that a good and prosperous society is achievable when a government's participation in certain key spheres is drastically reduced concerning individual action, private property rights, and the rule of law.

Topical Focus: IPPA's core areas of interest include development economics, trade, entrepreneurship, property rights, education, environment, health, and safety. Keeping these in mind, IPPA has several goals that it follows throughout its work:

1. Empowering people
2. Individual liberty and choice
3. Private property rights protection
4. An economy based on free enterprise
5. Democratic government under the rule of law
6. An autonomous and free civil society
7. The facilitation of trade within Africa and beyond

Operations: IPPA engages in a number of activities that include research, seminars/workshops, newsletters, organizing essay competitions, writing on developmental issues, and student-based programs.

The Sudd Institute

Country: South Sudan

Director: Jok Madut Jok

Point of Contact: same

Overview: The Sudd Institute is an independent research organization that conducts and facilitates research and training to inform public policy and practice, to create opportunities for discussion and debate, and to improve analytical capacity in South Sudan. Its mission is to promote informed and accountable policy and practice that responds to the needs, wants, and well-being of the South Sudanese people. The institute was established to close the knowledge gap and help ensure that decisions made during this critical period in the country’s history result in positive change.

Topical Focus: To contribute to developing government efficiency, accountability, and transparency, the Sudd Institute offers critical analysis about key governance issues, including resource generation and allocation, relations between the national government and the states, and the constitution development process. The Sudd Institute follows two tracks:

1. Track 1: addresses internal and external insecurity by aiming to help decision-makers to better understand the causes and consequences of such violence that has wreaked havoc across the country and to offer recommendations for policy and practical change
2. Track 2: geared towards building an inclusive, responsive, and transparent government

Operations: As South Sudan embarks on critical state building, nation building, and development initiatives, little is known or understood about the country and the needs of its institutions and people. To fill this knowledge gap, Sudd operates by conducting, facilitating, and communicating high quality, independent, and action-oriented research and analysis. It provides opportunities for discussion and debate. Finally, it focuses on improving analytical capacity and research skills in South Sudan.

West Africa Network for Peacebuilding (WANEP)

Country: Ghana HQ

Director: Chukwuemeka B. Eze

Point of Contact: same

Overview: The West Africa Network for Peacebuilding (WANEP) is a leading regional peacebuilding organization founded in 1998 in response to the civil wars that plagued West Africa in the 1990s. Over the years, WANEP has succeeded in establishing strong national networks in every member state of ECOWAS, with over 500 member organizations across West Africa.

Topical Focus: WANEP places special focus on collaborative approaches to conflict prevention, and peacebuilding, working with diverse actors from civil society, governments, intergovernmental bodies, women's groups, and other partners in a bid to establish a platform for dialogue, experience-sharing, and learning, thereby complementing efforts at ensuring sustainable peace and development in West Africa and beyond.

Operations: In 2002, WANEP entered into a historic partnership with the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), an inter-governmental structure, for the implementation of a regional early warning and response system (ECOWARN). A memorandum of understanding between WANEP and ECOWAS was signed in 2004 for five years, and has since been renewed for another 5 years. This partnership constitutes a major strategic achievement for WANEP and West Africa civil society as it offers the much-desired opportunity to contribute to Track I response to conflicts and policy debates.

WANEP has more than 500 member organizations across the member states of ECOWAS. At the continental level, WANEP is a member of the Peace and Security cluster of the African Union’s (AU) Economic, Social and Cultural Council (ECOSOCC), representing West Africa. At the international level, WANEP has a Special Consultative Status with the United Nations Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) and is the West Africa Regional Representative of the Global Partnership for the Prevention of Armed Conflict (GPPAC). WANEP is the Chair of GPPAC.

The Africa Program

The Africa Program works to address the most critical issues facing Africa and U.S.-Africa relations, build mutually beneficial U.S.–Africa relations, and enhance understanding about Africa in the United States.

The Program achieves its mission through in-depth research and analyses, including our blog Africa Up Close, public discussion, working groups, and briefings that bring together policymakers, practitioners, and subject matter experts to analyze and offer practical options for tackling key challenges in Africa and in U.S.-Africa relations.

The Africa Program focuses on four core issues:

i. Inclusive governance and leadership
ii. Conflict prevention and peacebuilding
iii. Trade, investment, and sustainable development
iv. Africa’s evolving role in the global arena

The Program maintains a cross-cutting focus on the roles of women, youth, and technology, which are critical to Africa’s future: to supporting good governance, to securing peace, to mitigating poverty, and to assuring sustainable development.
